

Ministerial Changes.
At the recent conference of M. E. church in Portland Rev. Sykes was transferred from this city to Beaverton and Rev. S. W. Stryker of Portland was sent to Oregon City.

Rev. Sykes has been with the Methodist church in this city two years, the limit allowed by the rules of his denomination and in that time has proved himself to be an able minister and an efficient worker in church. His many friends both in and out of the church regret his departure, but feel consoled in the fact that his successor comes recommended as one of Portland's ablest preachers. Rev. Stryker has had charge of the Clark church in East Portland for the past two years and is said to be a speaker of force and a man that can work in unison with his parishioners.

Kindergarten School.
On Monday of this week Miss Minnie Ackerman opened her kindergarten school at her residence, corner Seventh and Water streets. She will be assisted by Miss Goldsmith, of Eugene, who thoroughly understands the kindergarten work and is a singer of rare talent. Miss Ackerman now has all the charts and appliances used in the best schools and will be able to do good work with her scholars. Pupils will be received at any time.

Mr. L. B. Moore, who for some four years has been the accommodating and efficient agent for the Southern Pacific in this city, left last Tuesday, with his family, for Junction City, where he will have charge of the company's office in that city. Mr. Moore was agent at that place before coming to Oregon City and as his wife's parents reside there, they will not be among strangers. Elmer E. Boyd, night operator at Junction City, will take Mr. Moore's place in the company's office in this city. Mr. Boyd comes well spoken of as a gentleman and a thorough business man and will doubtless make as many friends as Mr. Moore had in this city.

At the annual gathering of the Native Sons and Daughters of Oregon on Monday last at the state fair, Colonel R. A. Miller, of this city, gave the principal address of the evening. Those who heard it say that it was a masterly effort and well worthy of the speaker and the occasion. Of such merit was it that the Salem Statesman gave it in full in its edition of Wednesday.

A social gathering took place at the residence of Jos. Baddorf at Willamette Falls on Friday evening. The evening was passed pleasantly with games and conversation, and before the guests took their leave, they were served with an elegant lunch by Mrs. Baddorf that was highly appreciated and was a flattering compliment to that lady's culinary skill.

Charlie and Cora Ward, accompanied by their parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Ward, of Viola, were in Oregon City last Saturday. The young people were on their way to Salem to spend two weeks with the family of their uncle, B. C. Ward.

Rev. Mr. Quimby, the new M. E. minister for the Viola circuit, will preach at Redland hall next Sunday evening. Rev. A. P. Gillett, former minister at that place is assigned to a circuit at Canyonville.

Latest in Harvesting Machinery.
The low hung hayrack, which can be used with ordinary wagon wheels, and which swings only 18 inches from the ground, saves much labor in loading, and as the hind axle may be longer than the fore it is said to draw more easily and to enable a team to carry a larger load. Unloading is robbed of its terrors by the horse fork and carrier, the Rochester sling taking off the load in three lifts and having an attachment that adapts it to any hay carrier without a change of pulley.

Hayrakes are nearly perfect. The distinctive features of the new Emperor sulky rake are a hand lever which cannot change position when the foot dump is used; a calm action for releasing dog, which lets the teeth fall with little jar, and a doubly tumbled frame which prevents sagging.

The manufacturers of small grain harvesters have added numerous improvements since last season which have simplified the machines and made them still more effective. Ball and roller bearings greatly lessen the draft. The use of the best steel frames makes a lighter and stronger outfit. One of the very newest machines is a combined header and binder, cutting a 12 foot swath. One man and four horses can operate it, and if conditions are favorable cut 85 to 40 acres of grain a day. If the grain for any reason is very short, the machine may be used as a header. It will harvest wheat, oats, rye, barley, flax, rice, timothy, clover, alfalfa, etc. The Carver machine has a strong competitor in the Continental Giant, which so combines the Continental steel header and the Giant harvester in one machine that it may be used for either purpose. It also cuts a 12 foot swath and is operated by four horses or oxen. The Wyckoff harvester is notable for a unique plan of elevating grain to a low platform at the driver's side, where it is bound and dropped to the carrier that discharges the bundles. This requires but little power, and as the machine is low adapted to rough ground.

The Plano company of Chicago has a flywheel attached to its binder which gives a uniform motion, does away with the slipping of the main wheel and causes the whole machine to run lighter. The friction clutch reel enables the reel to turn either way upon striking a stone or limb. The McCormick machines are also in the line of improvement.—American Agriculturist.

A TOLSTOI ANECDOTE.
How the Author Treated a Publisher Who Did Not Know Him.
The following characteristic little story of that eccentric genius, Count Leo Tolstoi, is communicated to our Odessa correspondent by a Moscow journalist.

After completing one of his recent short works the count went in search of a new publisher. He appeared one forenoon in the publishing office of a magazine where he was personally unknown. He was dressed after the manner of a better class man, and the chief of the establishment, probably given to judging from appearances, was not over polite or patient in listening to the count's request to have his sketch published, at the same time taking the manuscript from his pocket.

"Oh," said the publisher, "I really cannot be bothered. It is no use my looking at your sketch. We have hundreds of such things in hand and have really no time to deal with yours, even though you were in a position to guarantee the cost, which I very much doubt."

Tolstoi slowly rolled up his manuscript, and replacing it in his pocket observed:

"I must be laboring under some misapprehension. I have been told that the public likes to read what I write."

"The public likes to read what you write!" exclaimed the publisher, closely scrutinizing him. "Who are you? What is your name?"

"My name is Leo Tolstoi."

The astonished and abashed publisher was instantly on the other side of the counter, expressing the most profuse apologies and entreating the count to do him the distinguished honor of permitting him to publish the sketch. Tolstoi quietly buttoned up his coat with the manuscript in his breast pocket, saying:

"You have no time, you say, having so many hundreds of these things in hand. I must find a publisher who has time, and one who will not require a guarantee. Davidyana!" And the count walked off in his usual nonchalant manner.—London News.

HE WANTED TO KNOW.
But the Sporting Editor Found the Question Too Deep For Him.
"Is this the place where they answer questions?" asked the rough looking man as he entered the little back room in a newspaper office.

"There's a man on the staff who makes a bluff at doing it," said the sporting editor, "but he isn't here now."

"Oh, well, maybe you'll do," said the stranger.

"We don't answer verbal questions," protested the sporting editor. "Write your questions out and send them in."

"It isn't much of a question, and I thought perhaps you"—

"Oh, I don't know where the reference books are," interrupted the newspaper man.

"They wouldn't do you any good anyway," said the stranger. "This isn't a book question; it's an up to date, modern one. It's timely, you understand."

"Well, then, fire ahead. I may know something about it."

"It's about the new woman!"—

"Stop there!" cried the sporting editor. "That's clear out of the sporting department."

"No, it isn't," protested the stranger. "The bloomer girl belongs to that department along with the bicycles, doesn't she?"

"Maybe she does," replied the sporting editor. "I hadn't thought of that. Go ahead."

"Well, you see, I'm a street car conductor."

"Yes."

"And I want to know if the bloomer girl will get off the car backward like the—"

But the sporting editor had thrown up both hands as an intimation that the problem was clear beyond him.—Chicago Post.

The Banania Flea.
All tourists in the highlands know Banania. They may not know why a lobster is, in the west highlands, called "a Banania flea." From a book referred to we gather that a good many years ago an American was stopping at the Banania hotel, and he made himself very obnoxious by his contemptuous remarks on Scottish scenery. "Ben Nevie," he said, "do you call that a mountain? You should see our mighty Rockies! Loch Limbie! Do you call that a lake? You should see our Lake Superior!" and so on. The highland water was exasperated, and procuring a live lobster he secreted it, in requital of the insults, in the American's bed. Hardly had the American gone to sleep when the lobster caught him firmly by the toe, and he jumped out of bed with a yell and rang for the boots. "Boots," he said solemnly, rubbing his toes as he spoke, "you may not have such big mountains and big lakes here as we have in the states, but you have the most tartan big fleas I ever experienced."—London Paper.

Shy Great Men.
Mrs. Julia Ward Howe tells two new anecdotes of the shyness of literary men—one of Hawthorne, of whom such anecdotes are common, and the other of Irving. Irving, she says, attempted to make a speech at a dinner given to Charles Dickens, but after mumbling a few words indistinctly he remarked, "I can't go on," and sat down. Of Hawthorne's timidity she had a glimpse while calling with her husband on Mrs. Hawthorne in Concord. While they were in the parlor they saw a tall, slim man come down the stairs, and Mrs. Hawthorne called out: "Husband, husband! Dr. Howe and Mrs. Howe are here!" Hawthorne bolted across the hall and out through the door without even looking into the parlor.

At the Boarding House.
Boarder—What's that noise out there? Somebody beating a carpet?
Landlady's Husband—No, it's Jones trying to beat his board bill, and my wife is onto him.—Detroit Free Press.

POTATO EXPERIMENTS.

At Many Stations to Test Varieties, Time and Manner of Planting, Cultivation, Etc.
During the past few years a great amount of work has been done at the 36 different stations in the United States which have worked on potatoes. Many old methods have been found correct, while important points of progress and suggestions for change have been made. In bulletin No. 40 from the Illinois station are reported results of experiments carried on by this station, with statements of some results obtained at the other stations. As to varieties, it is found that no two stations agree as to which is best, and usually the same station does not agree with itself two years together.

The potato seems to be so variable and so sensitive to the conditions under which it is grown that about the only recommendation which it is safe to make would be to adhere to the standard varieties at least for the main crop. In a word, it is safest to plant such varieties as are well known, for they are well known because they have proved generally satisfactory to growers.

There is a widespread belief among farmers that it is best to change occasionally seed of all kinds of crops. There is not much doubt but that in many cases it is better to change seed, but it must have its limitations. Perhaps the most extensive work in studying the effects of change of seed has been done at the Vermont and Maryland stations. In four cases out of eight in Vermont the seed from Maryland gave the best yield, and in Maryland their home grown seed gave the best yield in five cases out of eight, though the average was still in favor of the Vermont seed. The Georgia station reported in 1890 that "home grown seed gave slightly higher yields than the imported from the north." Missouri reports a comparison of home grown and northern grown seed in 1890, with 27 varieties, and the result as a whole was in favor of the home grown seed in the proportion of 100 to 98. In New York a single trial did not favor the practice of changing seed. The conclusions drawn are therefore that "changing seed from one locality to another is of doubtful value." The size of seed pieces to be planted has received more attention than any other phase except the test of varieties. Twenty stations have carried on large numbers of experiments, and the general conclusion is that "the larger the seed pieces used the greater the yield." It was also denied that it makes no difference what part of the potato is used for seed.

As regards time of planting, it is made to appear that, "with rare exceptions, the earlier the planting is done the better will be the crop. The late planting is too apt to be cut off by hot, dry weather and the leaf blight. Late varieties, too, have been almost driven out of the field on account of the leaf blight and the uncertainty of having reasonable weather for growing and maturing the crop." Depth of planting potatoes has been made a subject of study at five experiment stations. The results have been somewhat contradictory, but with the greater number of trials turning out in favor of comparatively shallow planting. In the greater number of trials the best results have come from planting two to three inches deep. It is learned from the report on methods of cultivating potatoes that the tendency is toward thorough preparation of the soil and level culture.

On the grounds of the Illinois station commercial fertilizers have failed to give profitable results, though it is believed in other sections that they pay. At the Kentucky experiment station, Lexington, potash, either in the form of muriate or sulphate, has been used profitably, while neither nitrate nor phosphate has made very appreciable increase in the yield. At the Michigan experiment station, Lansing, wood ashes gave better results than any of the commercial fertilizers, while barnyard manure was found better still. It is entirely probable that in other parts of this state valuable results could be had from the use of some of the commercial fertilizers. "Most of the experiment stations in other states have found benefit in applying a commercial fertilizer in some form, but usually it is not necessary to use a complete fertilizer, because it is not usual for all the three principal elements of fertility to be lacking. Not unfrequently the application of nitrogen or potash or phosphorus alone in some form gives nearly as good results as the application of all of them and at a decidedly less cost."

Concerning Subsoiling.
A correspondent of the Kansas Farmer writes as follows:
I wish to go on record as making the statement that deep subsoiling in the proper kind of soil, accompanied with heavy fertilizing, will produce more than double ordinary farming or gardening, provided the crop is planted thick enough. Or, in other words, twice as much moisture, with liberal dressing of manure, will enable us to plant much closer, and of course a corresponding increase in the returns. For instance, turnips, beets and radishes can be successfully drilled only ten inches apart and an enormous yield secured, and the surface will be shaded by the top growth. Early Ohio potatoes can actually be made to produce as much to the hill by planting in drills 12 by 12 inches, instead of 14 by 10 or 36, as many use. Less land, highly enriched and deeply saturated with water, is the "way out" for the Kansas farmer. Altogether I have about six acres in garden stuff, and I make the statement that subsoiling in a dry season will actually double the crop.
