CORN FEEDING.

How to Make the Most Out of Pork, Beef, Mutton and Dairy.

There is in this country an immense corn crop this year. Much the larger part will be fed and sold in secondary products-pork, beef, mutten, poultry and the products of the dairy. All of these for a year or more to come can be supplied by this country cheaper than by any other and mainly because our corn crop is so bountiful. To make the most of corn, so as to produce all its secondary products most cheaply, is therefore a matter of national concern.

Thanks to the increasing intelligence of farmers, wasteful methods are now much less common than they were. But there are errors in feeding still tolerated that greatly lessen the value of the corn crop. In the first place corn is not itself a complete ration. It is concentrated starch with too little of the nitrogenous or flesh and muscle forming nutrition. Feeding it with cornstalks makes it less concentrated, but does not much change the character of the ration. The meal should always be fed with bran, wheat middlings or either flaxseed meal or cottonseed meal. The stalks ought always to be fed with clover hay whenever that can be procured, and if only meadow hay or straw can be had there should be an extra amount of wheat bran to go with it.

is to use it largely for young growing stock of any kind. Corn is fattening and does not furnish in sufficient quantity the nutrition needed for growth. It is also a much more difficult food to digest than are grains which are oily, like flaxseed, which is, however, so much more nutritions that it can only be given in very small rations with safety. Milk cows may be fed some cornmeal, mixed with bran and cut hay, so long as it does not fatten them. If this tendency and sluggish and the need of a tonic and is observed, lessen the commeal ration alterative is felt. A prompt use of this at once. The commeal will probably only be needed while the cow is on succulent and not very nutritious feed. Some grain can usually be fed with profit to cows kept on corn silage during the winter, Corn with oats, ground to- poison. On the farm it is counted good practice to haul out the manure as top dressing for clover grass or for grain that is to be seeded with clover in the spring. There is little or nothing of value washed away from manure on land seeded with Farmers and the traveling public will whenever the grass or clover is growing, and by being drawn out early the rains carry it down and mix it more thoroughly with the soil. When warm weather comes, the manure ferments, warming the soil and developing ammonia. But the market gardener almost invariably composts manure before us ing it. The gardener has only naked soil on which to apply unfermented manure. When heavy rains come, some of this manure will be leached away and lost. Scattered in the soil, the manure does not begin to ferment until too late in rather than good.

Wherever farmers want to give an early start in vegetation they should compost the manure. It can be rotted down long before the weather is warm enough for anything to grow, and then be applied in time for spring rains to late in winter. The composted manure can be spread so much more evenly that its smaller bulk will cover a larger surface and do more good than the same mannre as it is drawn from the stable and unfermented.

Shredded Corn Fodder.

"After having been cut and shocked in the field the corn should stand in the shock until it is as dry as if intended for busking. It may be ricked out of doors, and, if the stalks are not thoroughly dry, this is probably the safer We have never piled it much deeper than three feet in an 8 by 8 foot corner on the barn floor, and it heated a little in a pile of this size, although there was no mold or other damage. If ricked outside, it should be covered so ment. These hard times with new newsas to protect it from the rain and paper advertising contracts for two years, The Farmers' Review. He adds:

"The way that suits us best is to cut the corn when thoroughly matured, shock it and busk it when dry. The stalks are then stacked and shredded from time to time through the winter. By leaving the stalks whole until time for feeding their aroma is better preserved, and the shredded fodder is then more palatable. We use shredded fodder mixed with dried brewers' grains, and steamed for the horses and colts which are running out, along with one feed of hay a day. By using shredded fedder for cattle once a day we saved one feed of hay, and I found that it did not decrease the milk flow. The top and bottom of stacks we cut for bedding, and it makes most excellent material for Angeline Berry to J F Denninger that purpose."

Government Crop Reports.

The returns to the statistician of the agricultural department for October make the general condition of corn 90.5 U S to Ole Hanson Feb 17 '94 nw 4 per cent against 91 for September. The wheat crop is generally short in quantity and poor in quality. A decrease in cats is also noticeable, but not to so great an extent.

The world's sugar crop for 1895-6 is placed at 7,069,756 tons against 8,208,-$61 tons last year. In this estimate the beet sugar producing countries, excluding the United States, furnish 4, 235, 100 tons against 4,688,500 in 1894-5. The world's visible supply is estimated to be 1,881,306 tons against 1,500,413 tons last year. Returns for cotton show a decline of 8.5 points from September condition, being 6.7 for October.

In the Vegetable Garden.

Plowing before winter is a help where early garden stuff is grown. Where drainage is deficient put in tile

A good way to store cabbage is to open trenches and set the heads in them, closely together upon their roots, filling in a little soil. Then cover with an inverted trough made of two boards, and this, later on, with litter or manure. Soft heads thus set out will grow hard during winter. The stumps may be planted out in spring and will produce a crop of good greens. Celery may be The greatest mistake in corn feeding stored in the same manner for spring
