The Flax Industry.

One of the neglected industries of Clackamas county, is that of the cultivation and manufacture of flax. With soil and climate which will raise flax of very good quality, and stalks of sufficient length to make its production profitable, it seems strange that the farmers have not ere this turned their attention to flax raising. That the climatic conditions are favorable to its cultivation, is proven by actual experiment. M. Riebhoff raised half an acre this year which vielded over a ton, the stalks averaging 36 to 40 inches in length. L. D. Mumpower, a neighbor of Mr. Riebhoff, they How many suffer torms day after day, making life a borden and robbing calatence of all pleasure, owing to the accret suffering from Files. U. Barlow, of Barlow, raised 18 acres U. Barlow, of Barlow, raised 18 acres which averaged 40 inches in length. That flax-raising can be made to pay is demonstrated by the fact stated by responsible persons that, when the stalks are 30 inches in length, it will bring $15 per ten, that attaining a height of 60 inches, bringing $45 per ton. The above growers shipped Flax Fiber Association, who have a machine at that place to separate the fiber from the vegetable matter of the stalk, after which process, it is baled and sent East, where a ready market is had for all that Oregon has so far produced, and the demand has increased to such an extent that Eastern parties have year for which good prices will be paid.
