A RETURNED KLONDIKER.
Not Impressed With the Outlook for the Winter.

Milton Misamore, of Albina, whose picture adorns the first page of Wednesday's Oregonian, has just returned from the Yukon country and relates an experience that will not tend to increase the rush there this winter. He is emphatic in his denouncement of the North American Trading & Transportation Company, and of the Alaska Commercial Company, the two corporations that at present control the trade of the Yukon. He told with greater detail what has been lately touched upon in the press reports, indicating that the responsibility for whatever suffering and death by starvation there may be on the Yukon rests with these people, whose greed induced them to transport whisky rather than food.

Mr. Misamore says the outlook for food for winter is very gloomy because the transportation companies that control the Yukon, knowing the lack of provisions in there this season, have deliberately encouraged traffic, telling people they could get all the provisions they wanted at Circle City; where the stores were empty and the doors closed. Besides this of the tons of provisions sent in this summer, only 10 or 15 per cent was grub, the rest being saloon supplies.

Speaking of the climate, he said: "The climate is not especially trying, if one takes care of one's self, except in such places as Dawson City, which is built right on the clear ice of a frozen swamp. There is no drainage in such places, and the refuse of the camps stays right in the moss and mud of the surface. Consequently there is much typhoid. I know no better remedy for it, or rather preventative, than typhoid, a good dose of quinine and whisky upon the first symptoms of its presence in one's self."

"A man to have even a reasonably complete outfit," said Mr. Misamore, "must not figure on less than 100 pounds of eatables for each month of his contemplated stay. Now, you would say that 1200 pounds of provisions would be a year's supply; yet it would not be enough if you expected to stay a year, because if you were to stay so long, you could not get away for a number of months longer. Thus, if you leave here next spring and remain in the Alaskan interior until the following winter, you could not get away from there until the following spring, by which time your supply of provisions would be exhausted and you would have nothing to get out with unless you buy more there. So 1200 pounds is less than you need, if you expect to stay over winter, and more than you need if you expect to return the same season. Besides this weight of food alone, you must figure upon several hundred pounds of tools and other supplies, and in this connection I want to speak of weapons. This little pocket knife is all the weapon I have carried or had any use for. I have been reading an interview with a youth who lately came out of the Yukon country, and he is quoted as saying a man can shoot all the game he wants to there. Now, I have traveled over that region about as much as a man could do in the time I had, and the only game I saw in the Yukon country was a solitary porcupine. You can't take time to hunt game if you go to hunt gold, and you would better take an extra pick or shovel than a shooting iron."

Mr. Misamore is well-known in Oregon City, where he formerly resided and worked in the woolen mills. He married one of the Singer girls and lived on the hill for a number of years.
