Concerning Breakfast.

The breakfast appetite varies strangely. Some persons are content with a cup of coffee and a piece of toast; others make it the most determined meal of the day. Once it was formidable indeed. In Sir John Hawkins' 'History of Music' is quoted a sixteenth century manuscript belonging to the house of Northumberland which gives the breakfast arrangements of the Percy family both for Lent and for flesh days, and, oh, how some of us have fallen away in trencher work! Here is the simple Northumbrian scheme: 'Breakfast for my lord and lady during Lent: First, a loaf of bread in trenchers, two manchets (a manchet was a small loaf of white bread), a quart of beer, a quart of wine, two pieces of salt fish, six bacon'd herring, four white herring or a dish of sprats. Breakfast for my Lord Percy and Master Thomas Percy: Item, half a loaf of household bread, a manchet, a bottle of beer, a dish of butter and a piece of salt fish, a dish of sprats or three white herring. Breakfast for the nursery for my Lady Margaret and Master Ingram Percy: Item, a manchet, a quart of beer (this for the nursery), a dish of butter, a piece of salt fish, a dish of sprats or three white herring.' At ordinary times my lord and lady fared thus: 'First, a loaf of bread in trenchers, two manchets, a quart of beer, a quart of wine, half a chine of mutton, or else a chine of beef boiled.' Lord Percy and Master Thomas Percy disposed of 'half a loaf of household bread, a manchet, one bottle of beer, a checking, or else three mutton bones boiled,' while to the thirsty nursery went 'a manchet, one quart of beer and three mutton bones boiled.'—Cornhill Magazine.

Australian Warfare.

Their military tactics were simple in the extreme, but they were all the case required. They relied primarily upon surprise, secondarily upon noise, with a vague and diminitive tertiary element of reliance upon weapons. The first sallies failed in this encounter, but even though weapons were freely used for a brief period there was no considerable waste of material in the line of ammunition during the course of the combat. I noticed that most of the spears, waddies, clubs, or whatever weapons were thrown were either actually caught in the air or quickly gathered up and hurled back again. There was very little waste of blood, too, I am sure, if, indeed, blood spilled upon a native battlefield can be accounted wasted. There was very little waste of anything but words, and they were not really wasted, on our side at least, for they won the day. It was much less expensive and much more sensible than civilized war. There was all of the fun and excitement and noise in that battle that there is in a good game of football, without one-half the danger and serious results. There was as real relief to pent up patriotism and as good an airing of strained diplomatic relations, as well patronized an opportunity for calling hard names and saying bad things of each other, as complete exultation in victory, and as thorough, submissive chagrin in defeat as great guns and modern munitions ever secured for two nations, and, withal, it was as harmless as a French duel.—Lippincott's.

London Hotels and Boots.

Leaving one's boots outside the bedroom door to be cleaned overnight is an essentially English custom, so English that it is not understood across the border. If we may put credence in Punch's story of the Scotch host who replied to his English guest's statement, after an ambrosial night, that he would put his boots outside the door, 'All ri', 'ole fel', nobody'll touch 'em.' But in London the practice is so well established that in some of the newer hotels each room is provided with a small cupboard having one door opening out into the passage and another into the room, in which boots may be placed. The outer door of the cupboard has a key, which is kept by the chambermaid, while the inner door can be bolted on the inside so as to insure the occupant of the room against any breach of his or her privacy. Besides the protection which it affords to boots, the arrangement has another advantage which will be specially appreciated by ladies, for it obviates the necessity of visitors appearing at their doors in dishabille to take in their hot water or tea.—Argonaut.

Talking With God.

Three or four elders were in a street car discussing the closing work, when one of them remarked that the appointments were all 'fixed,' and while the bishop had not told them positively what he would do yet everything was certain. 'Don't be too certain of that,' remarked another brother, who had been with Bishop Fowler before. 'I was in a conference once with him, and we fixed things all up, after which the bishop asked to be allowed to commune with God for a little while. We left him alone with God, and when we came back he had mixed us up so we didn't know a permanent location from a confession of faith. Now, if he gets off to talking with God again he is likely to break that slate of ours into such small pieces that we can't find a piece of it big enough to write our names on.'—Lawrence Journal.

Miss Cayenne's Comment.

'Surgery is constantly performing some new wonder!' exclaimed Willie Washington. 'To think of its enabling a man to live without his normal quantity of brain!' 'Yes,' replied Miss Cayenne, 'and, after all, painstaking art can do nothing which nature does not accomplish as an everyday matter.'—Washington Star.
