Etiquette In the Nursery.

The nursery is the child's microcosm Here be begins to practice those gifts and graces which will stand him in stead at a later day.

Let the children be taught to avoid the use of slang. It is as well that they shall have no especial pet phrase and that their speech shall be refined.

They may play as merrily as they choose, but it is well that they shall not be too rough or botsterous. In ing about a house children are not the gainers if allowed to tear from top to bottom of the stairs like little savages or suffered to shout at the tops of their voices or to interrupt conversation.

A well bred child will bring its toys and be neither a trouble nor a torment in the drawing room where his mother and ber friends are talking.

About children's questions - as a rule, they should be answered as fully and clearly as possible, but children should not be encouraged in the mere asking of a long string of questions simply for the sake of putting themselves in evidence.

One needs to exercise discretion in answering the question that is asked because the child really wishes to know, and to decide what answer to give when the child is simply determined to be in the foreground. It is sometimes best to say very plainly and candidly to a child, "I cannot explain this to you now; I shall do so when you are older,"

English children are kept in the nursery to an extent almost unknown among us. They see their parents less frequently than do American children.

Mamma is to them a sweet presiding genius, something very like a queen, who comes in now and then, to whom complaints are referred, who is the real sovereign, but is not always at their beck and call. The soft pillowy bosom of norse, usually a middle aged and comfortable sort of parsonage, receives their little heads in their childish trials and troubles.

The nurse takes the children to walk, attends to their meals, manages all their affairs.

The plan has something to be said in its favor, for certainly a mild mannered and equable nurse is better for a child than a wearied and half hysterical mother. - Philadelphia Press.

English Army Nurses.

America, strictly speaking, has no army nurses. We have proficient nurses who care for the ills of patients in our city hospitals and in private families, but they have not received the particular training that is essential to life and work in overcrowded wards and hospital ships. Fifteen years since the English government recognized the fact that it was necessary to give women special training for military nursing, and the queen founded Netley hospital soon after Florence Nightingale's magnificent work in the Orimea. The students at Netley are taught with scrupulous care. They are required to work in the hospital, first as probationers and then as registered nurses, from five to six years, and the government gives no diplomas until the severest examinations have been passed. Once graduated from Netley school, a woman becomes a part of the British army, subject to the com-

I'wo or three other men laid hold when he got to shore and helped drag him out of the water. He was powerless to help himself.
"What a pity be had to turn back!"

"He couldn't help it," said another.
"The poor chap's half dead himself."
"Great heavens!" shouted a stout man. "He's got her!"

Sure enough, there, held between his knees, with a deathlike grip, was a little figure shrouded in wet calico and long wet hair. You'd have thought the people had gone mad if you had heard them. The dude was working over Spider and cheering and yelling as he worked; Fannie was on her knees, and the twin ran back and forth, from Spider to the other twin, who was standing on her head, while they slapped and pumped her without mercy.

There was nothing equal to the enduring quality of those twins. You couldn't kill one of them. That day, even before Spider came to himself, Lou was on her feet again, walking back to the boat, escorted by an immense bodyguard of rejoicing people.

The next thing on the programme was to reward Spider. As he wouldn't touch a cent of money that was a difficult matter. After some inquiry Mrs. Trencher learned that although of good family and well educated Spider was by nature and habit a wanderer. She and her family were about to go out to Colorado for a trip, and in lieu of anything better offered the man the chance of go

He had plenty to do just now, for a family wedding was on foot. Sue was still scraggy, but Lou had blossomed into a lovely, rounded out, softly tinted girl, and some one had discovered this, as men will, and made love to her, and she had made love back. They were to be married tonight, and Spider was getting ready for it all. Fannie was helping on every side. She was Mrs. Dude now and was remarkably fastidious about her dress, as became one of that but no doubt be was tired. It was all over-that is, the knot was tied, and the fresh faced girl was looking up into the eyes of her husband with the lovelight which links this world to heaven. All were chatting and laughing and congratulating the young couple-all but a man who stood in the shadow of the doorway, looking from his grimy hands to the smooth, fair exterior of the happy lover.

Nobody noticed him—there was too much going on-and he stood there, the tears chasing each other down his face and every now and then a great sob convulsing his strong chest.

When at last the family remembered and ran out to find him and fetch him in, he was gone.

They tell about him today-how faithful he was, how constant in his care of Lou, how watchful and devoted -and they wonder where he is and why he left them.-Elizabeth Strong in Chicago Record.

A Providential Escape.

In "Manitoba Memories" Rev. George Young relates an experience of his boyhood which, he says, formed the turning point in his career and led him eventually to choose the life of a missionary in the north land.

Early one stormy morning when I was a boy, says Mr. Young, I was feeding the cattle in the basement of a stable when a terrific windstorm struck the building and crushed it like an eggshell. Hearing the crash of the falling and breaking timbers, I fell on my knees in terror and began to pray.

In a moment, as it seemed, the storm passed and stillness prevailed. I was completely encompassed by the broken timbers and the mows of hay and grain which had been stored in the upper part of the barn. I was in utter darkness, too, and at first completely dazed. Finding myself unharmed, however, I recovered my senses and began to dig into the hay to escape. After a long struggle I worked myself free from the bay and stood in the midst of the wreck.

It was afterward ascertained how narrowly I had escaped being crushed to death by the falling timbers. Had I been standing at the moment I must have been killed. The space wherein I had knelt was about a yard square and the only place where I could have escaped instant death. Much was made of my remarkable escape, which I have always regarded as a direct interposition of Providence, and in consequence I have devoted my J. L. BOWMAN, Manager.
