PURE WATER.

An Interesting Address by the Oregon City Water Commission.

OREGOS CITY, Jan., 9, 1899. Hon, C. D, Latourette,

Mayor of Oregon City, Sir :- Learning from the proceedings of the city council of this city that a committee has been appointed for the revision of the city charter, we wish to call your attention to a matter that concerns the citizens of Oregon City in the highest degree, and that is, the question of a pure and wholesome water supply for domestic purposes.

Since the first organization of this board the question of a new and better water supply for the city has been up for discussion at nearly every meeting of the board, and we long since decided that the Willamette river would not do, if we wished pure water, since at no distance that we can reach from this place can water be obtained from the river that will be free from contamination of the sewage of the cities up the valley. Having decided that the Willamette will not do, we have looked to the next nearest stream, which is the Clackamas, and find that we can there get a supply of good, pure, wholesome OREGON CITY AND PORTLAND RIVERTRIPS | mountain water that will answer our needs for many years to come.

From investigation that we have made we find that at a cost of from thirty to thirty five thousand dollers we can bring water from the Clackamas by gravity to our pumping station and there, by the present pumping plant, distribute it through our mains. Of course, the expenditure of this amount of money means that we must have authority to fasse more bonds, as our income is not sufficient to meet this outlay. Our bonded indebtedness is now limited to ten thousands dollars, which has all been issued and the proceeds invested in the present system. In order to make this improvement we should have authority to issue fifty thousand dollars of bonds, ten thousand of which is to be used in the retirement of the ENTERTAINMENT,-At Mount Pleasant present laste, leaving the balance for on the root over his little bank! he dreamed of vast audiences and storms of applause.

"In his character of recluse, as years drew on, he came to be regarded as gifted with magical powers. He never played in public. He never even played for their dances But they said he played for the birds and other wild things, and that he could make them do whatever he wished with the power of his music. However true this may be, it is a fact that he caught fish while others caught none And on still days, just before a storm perhaps, when even insects were quiet, the strains of his violin would float up from the river bottoms, sweet and clear and wonderfully sad. Then all who heard it would stop whatever they were doing and listen. Even the babies would stop their crying and field hands would swear no more that "The boy and his violin were never spart. Wherever he went he carried it with him, and when he slept it lay at his side. No mother was ever more considerate of her child than he was of it. "The violin, in spite of its humble surroundings, was a beautiful instrument. Several attempts had been made to sell it, but luckily the rich planters of the region, who were the moneyed class, knew nothing of its value or did not care. The boy had received the instrument from his father. His father had inherited it, so it was said, from his own mother, to whom some lineal ancestor had given it. But now of all their forgotten wealth the violin only was left.

and lonely, for he had warked all the way from his cabin, 12 miles away, and his heart was in his throat, too, I fancy. for he had never been in such crowds before, and he had come determined to earn enough money to pay the rent.

'Timidly at first and with hands that trembled he began to play, but as he felt the caress of the violin against his cheek and its voice responded to his touch his heart grew stronger. His eyes closed and his spirit was again among the sweet gum and pine. He was standing in a shadow near the entrance to a big hotel, and at first his music attracted no attention Several gentlemen were sitting on the hotel porch, it happened, chatting about cotton and other matters, and there was a momentary full in the conversation. Suddenly one of them exclaimed: 'Who in the world is that playing the violin? It's beautiful. They all listened. It was a wonderful melody they heard, quivering, flashing, full of fire, and yet through it all a sort of yearning, unspeakable melancholy. None of them moved. They were fear-

"A crowd had gathered about the musician by this time, staring and listening with open mouths and bated breath. And so they would have remained all night, I suppose, but a heavy faced villain of a policeman, with more authority than soul, shouldered into the crowd and told the boy to move on.

"Now, my brother William," said Uncle Joshua, "is something of a viclinist himself He was one of the party on the hotel porch, and no sooner had the policeman stopped the concert than up he got and ran after the strange musician like a boy after a circus parade.

"Billy had been over in Paris the winter before and while there had stumbled on to a lot of music by an old French composer whom the world had never discovered, by the name of Francois Fayette. This Fayette, my brother told me, had come to the city a century or two before from somewhere in the south of France, with a lot of music he had composed, and then disappeared. His music had lain undisturbed in the garret of an old building many years and from thence bad passed into the hands of a dealer in old manuscripts, and it was from him William secured

"Now, it seems that the piece William had heard the musician play that hight was one of these identical compositions by the forgotten Fayette. He had always thought it a marvelously sweet little composition, even when he played it himself But as he had heard the stranger render it it was a dream and a revelation.

"Well, the upshot of the matter was that after much urging and pleading William managed to bring the boy home with him that night. After we had fed him and he had rested and told play.

"Ab," said Uncle Joshua softly, as he sank back into his chair and closed his eyes, "I cannot tell you how he played. Even I had tears in my eyes that I couldn't keep back. And still his selections were always from the compositions of the misty Fayette. Where had he learned them? He could not tell us. It was all in his heart, he said. It was the music that had come to him from ment. They had been in arrears for murmuring pines and rippling streams, their rent goodness knows how long, but and some of it, he said, was what he heard on stormy nights.

"He played far into the night for us, and then next morning we had one of go and what to do confronted their sim- our darkies hitch up and take him home. William had given him enough money for his rent, and the boy promised a speedy return

"A week passed, and then another week. With his absence the wonder his playing had aroused in us increased. Indeed, we almost came to doubt the reality of it all. Where had be ever heard the music of Fayette? Indeed, how could be have ever heard it at all? He could not be an impostor. The mystery could not be explained away on the grounds of mere coincidence.

"We were on the point of driving out to the boy's cabin to hear him play again, when one morning, bright and early, a tall and lanky youth, carrying an oblong bundle under his arm, came up to the door of our house and inquired for William. He and I were esting breakfast at the time, and the stranger, evidently a Cracker, was ush-

"Be you all the gentleman ez give Bub the rent money?' he inquired, addressing William William said that he was 'Well, Bub, he's dead, en he sent you all this fer to remember him We learned little more. The boy had died two days before from no apparent cause. His last request was concerning the violin. "Two months later, when autumn was well on and the nights were becombefore the fireplace one evening talking about the boy who had played such wonderful music. William was holding the violin in his lap, idly examining the workmanship. Suddenly I saw him draw the violin up and look closely at plate that I've never noticed. By Jove, what if'- He jumped up and held the violin close to the light. It was hanging over his shoulder on the instant. And there, very faint, but clear enough in the strong light to be read, engraved sent our hearts a leaping like mad.

Three Layers of Atmosphere. It appears that in the atmosphere there are practically three distinct ourrents of air, the first lying at an elevation of from 900 to 1,500 meters, the second at from 2,500 to 4,000 meters and the upper one at from 6,000 to 8,000 meters above the surface of the earth. These are, to an extent, separate currents, flowing each with its own velocity. At the bottom of each of the layers the stratus clouds are formed, and at the top of each of the layers occur the cumulus clouds. This suggests that the stratus originate at the bottom of a moving current and the cumulos at the top. It is probable, then, that the stratus owe their origin to the difference in velocity and temperature of the two layers, while the cumulus are formed by ascending currents within the layer of air .- Professor F H Bigelow.

American Soldiers In Manila. Their brief experience in actual warfare established a notabble fact. It proved them courageous, decent, high minded soldiers, worthy of every confidence and cheerful in all circumstances If the laurels they have gained are small in comparison with those which rewarded the heroism of their comrades at Santiago, they are none the less honorable, for no men could have endured more or worked harder than they or have shown more valor. -- Cor. London Times

There is some reason for calling an owl the bird of wisdom, and yet there is cause for wondering if the crow is not mentally his superior. Crows are not disheartened by the gloom of late autumn. If the fog is too dense to fly through it, they rise above it or trot about the ground, discussing the situation with their fellows. Is this speaking too positively? I have long been familiar with an observing man who has lived all his days within sight and hearing of crows. He claims to understand their language and can repeat the "words" that make up their vocabulary. Certainly crows seem to talk, but do they? Does a certain sound made by them have always the one significance? Year after year I have listened and watched, watched and listened, and wondered if my friend was right He believes it. I believe it-almost. Are there limitations to ornithelogical interpretation? And is this un instance where truth is unattain ble?-- Lippincott's.

FAYETTE'S VIOLIN.

We had been discussing all kinds of ghostly and occult subjects that evening. Thompson and I, until the fire had dwindled away into a pile of gray ashes and Uncle Joshua had apparently fallen asleep. Thompson was a Theosophist and I a Presbyterian, so some of our tilts were of the liveliest sort. I had just delivered myself of a coup of peculiar poignancy, so I thought, when Uncle Joshua suddenly opened his eyes, stretched in his good, old fashioned way and said:

"I'm not up on karmas, astral bodies a ghost story of my own-one whose truth I can personally vouch for."

Thompson and I filled our pipes and Uncle Joshua hitched forward his chair
