BUTTER KING IS HE.

NEWMAN MAKES 8,000,000 POUNDS OF ELGIN PRODUCT ANNUALLY.

He began business as a $3 a Week Clerk—Now He Skims Cream From Five Million Quarts of Milk Every Day.

John Newman, who was recently elected president of the board of trade of Elgin, Ill., is the American butter king. In all the world he is probably the largest producer of that bovine gold which gilds the staff of life. Every day he drives up from the pasture a herd of 55,000 cows, and every morning he skims the cream from 500,000 quarts of milk, enough fluid to sail a yacht in.

Of course Mr. Newman does not literally and personally perform such a herculean task. As a matter of fact he buys most of his milk. On 2,250 farms in Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa there is scattered an army of persons who do the hard work. Mr. Newman merely does the hard thinking and the heavy looking on.

He does not go in for fancy clad milkmaids with pink and white complexions and larklike voices. His milkmaids do not wear sunbonnets. They are big, two fisted men who know how to make a contrary bridle "give down" and whose conversation during the morning and evening hours is limited to "so boom" and "hurray, you old critter," varied perhaps by unprintable remarks of a profane nature.

Mr. Newman does not buy milk like the average householder, who takes water and all in a quart. A man in each of the factories takes from each can each day a sample, which is put into a bottle bearing the patron's name. The aggregate samples of a week are tested for the percentage of butter fat—cream.

It has been figured—and this proportion may not be exactly accurate, but it serves as an illustration—that 100 pounds of the richest milk from the best sort of cows produces five pounds of butter. The aliphoid farmer's contribution, for instance, may not test over two pounds of cream to the 100 pounds of milk.

It thus happens that the semimonthly checks covering exactly the same quantity of milk are widely divergent. Mr. Newman wants the cream, not the water. His system is now being quite generally adopted.

The total output of butter from the Newman creameries is between 7,000,000 and 8,000,000 pounds a year. That is a whole lot of butter when you come to think of it. It would be enough to butter a state like Connecticut all over, and you could spread it on rather thick at that.

Mr. Newman is 56 years old now, and is in very comfortable financial circumstances. He hasn't been making butter all these years for fun. But he started in life very humbly. He was born in England and was one of a family of eight sons. So at 14 he was apprenticed to a draper, or, as we should say, to a dry goods merchant. The first year he received nothing but his "keep." The second year his salary was not large enough to bother him, and the prospects for ever making enough to live on were discouraging.

So after learning the business he took the advice of his aunt, Mrs. Robert Pinkerton, and came to America. He arrived in Chicago one Saturday in October, 1859. On Monday morning he went to work for Potter Palmer as clerk at $3 per week. But his training had been good, and he soon advanced. In a short time he was one of Mr. Palmer's best paid salesmen.

But he wanted a business of his own. When the Crosby Opera House was to be opened, he made application for the management of all the miscellaneous details in front of the footlights. There were 1,800 applications for the place, so Mr. Crosby abruptly told the young man. He replied that he was willing to be the thirteen hundred and first. The letters he presented from the men he knew made him the lucky one. He hired the doorkeepers, ran the ushers and programmes and came to own 125 pairs of opera glasses, which he rented—the first real business of his own.

In 1865 he went to Elgin to visit the Pinkerton boys and bought a country store, which he conducted until a short time ago. In the meantime he gradually drifted into the butter making business. He began with a dozen cows and a shabby little dairy, in which the churn was operated by a water wheel. Today you can hardly throw a stone in the vicinity of Elgin without hitting a Newman creamery. That is why he is the butter king of America.

The Kind You Have Always Bought

The Last of the Patchers.

I was born in 1837, and I have personal recollections of a lady in the early forties using them. The curate of ——— lodged in a farmhouse contiguous to my father's place. His wife was a tall, fine, handsome woman, dressed in black when I first saw her, and had patches—"beauty spots" they were called—on her forehead, cheek (left, I think) and chin. I told my mother on returning home, and she replied they were "beauty spots" and "in the fashion." I have a most vivid recollection of seeing her and her husband on the occasion. A handsomer couple you would rarely meet.—Notes and Queries.

The "Princess Christian Needle."

All lovers of art needlework who are acquainted with its fascinating as well as patient labors will hail with pleasure a clever English invention called the "Princess Christian needle." It has four separate eyes, by which embroiderers may work with from one to four threads at a time. Every woman familiar with embroidery will recognize the value of such a needle in shading figures or flowers and recall the torment and time lost in changing her silks. This needle was invented by a Miss Darrell, skilled in fine embroidery, who submitted it to Princess Christian, who was so impressed by its utility that her royal highness gave permission for it to be called by her name. Specimens of work done with this wonderful needle were exhibited at the same time and met the approbation of the princess, who has the reputation of being an expert in decorative needlework of all kinds.—Exchange.

Applications should be addressed to the Subscription Department, The Penny Magazine, Temple Court, New York City.

For Young Men and Young Women.

There is nothing that will arouse the ire of a young man or woman so quick as to have inferior laundry work put off on them. They may dress ever so well, but if their shirt front or shirt waist is mussed their neat appearance is spoiled. The Troy laundry makes a specialty of ladies' and gentlemen's fine work. There can be no better work than is done at the Troy. Leave your orders at Johnson's barber shop.

The most expensive bicycle tire on the market is the Dunlop. The highest quality rims are Boston laminated. The lightest and strongest frame connections are sheet steel stampings. The up-to-date bicycle must have absolutely dust proof bearings, adjustable handle-bars and internal expanders for fastening bars and saddle post. All these things and many more improvements are found on the Crescent, which sells for $35.00.
