

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26, 1899.

The 22d day of February is a day the American people delight to honor. The date anniversary was more than usually eventful, as there were several events to give it special importance. One was the gathering and feasting of the Virginia Democratic Association, that entertained many distinguished men of that party from all parts of the Union. There were present, as eminent guests, W. J. Bryan, of Nebraska, and Bailey, of Texas, and many more who made addresses and gave the occasion national importance. In Congress the two houses each gave attention to the reading of the farewell address of Washington, which in the senate was followed by memorial addresses on the life and character of the late Senator Morrill, of Vermont.

The White House was illuminated in the evening for the last public reception of the season. This was an occasion when the general public are received and all the beautiful premises and grounds of the presidential mansion were illuminated; the vast conservatories were especially brilliant. As I went past about nine in the evening it all looked like fairy land. It was interesting to stand and look on while the American people were sight-seeing. The long way from the outer gate to the door of the White House was filled by the waiting procession of those who were to be received. The majority were women of course, and they and their escorts stood by thousands in patient waiting. There was a strong corps of police as it was common ground for pickpockets as well as for patriotic Americans. As I passed on to the Corcoran art gallery, the long procession was to be seen waiting for several blocks. There must have been thousands who were thus patiently standing beside piles of snow that had accumulated from the recent blizzard. The air was like May and the snow piles rapidly disappearing, but it was an incongruous condition to see that fashionably dressed crowd beside those pyramids of snow. There is vast enjoyment, to one who loves to study human nature in reading character and observing costumes in such crowds as one sees here in the great capital city of America. It was rather too much trial of ones patriotism, however to form in line and wait for hours to be ushered into the presence of the ruler of the nation. It was my good fortune to visit old friends that evening, who were bound for the reception held by the Daughters of the American Revolution at the Corcoran art gallery. They had an extra card of invitation to offer me so that took me past the portals of the executive mansion.

The Corcoran art gallery is but two blocks from the White House, and it was also thronged for its occasion. It is a magnificent structure, with vast halls and galleries filled with priceless statuary and pictures. Take it when filled with people who were all at their best and in full dress, and the scene is above description. The ladies of this patriotic association were themselves worth seeing and Washington always delights to honor them when they annually come from all the states of this union. There was a long string of carriages reaching from the porte cochere of the building, but there was no delay in entering from the street. Nothing I have ever seen has equalled that vast throng as it swept on and on to reach where the reception committee awaited them.

The throng was directed toward the center, the committee awaited them under the center dome, surrounded by galleries that rose around, their railings filled with gay looking people who looked down on the work of reception. The receiving committee included the officers of the Daughters of the American Revolution, also General Nelson A. Miles and Admiral Schley, representing the heroes of the recent war. It was fit that the army and navy should be thus represented at this gathering, typical as it was of the struggle made by the infant republic to attain freedom. The scene was in the highest degree spectacular, for these distinguished officers were in full uniform helping these patriotic ladies sustain the memory of that olden time. With General Miles I had acquaintance, as when he was in command of the department of the Columbia he invited me to visit him at his headquarters, Vancouver.

One who has seen nothing of life at the capital cannot well imagine the scene that such an occasion calls forth. This was altogether different from any merely social affair. Here was common oration of the highest ideals of our nationality. That it took form as a grand function, and was made more national and interesting by the presence of these distinguished officers, was entirely consistent. That immense throng was in full dress and made the magnificent halls, rooms and corridors aglow with beauty and fashion. There was the swell of superb music sounding through it all, while the grand works of art looked down on scenes that made them seem more than ever wonderful. As a reminder of far-away Oregon, I met there Mrs. J. K. Kelly and her son. There was glamor about it all that forms one of the most striking features of Washington life it had been by fortune to have witnessed.

Congress is now winding up its last session for the 55th congress. The determination to finish the work so as not to make an extra session necessary, causes the strictest attention to business. The matters that affect our state are yet in abeyance but all that tact and energy can do will be done to win through on the question of river and harbor improvements. We are well represented and can depend on it that the delegations are losing no time and neglecting no effort that can secure results.

S. A. CLARKE.

An Interesting Lecture.

Lee M. Travis, a private in Company C, Second Oregon Volunteers lectured at Weinhard's hall Friday night. The affair was given under the auspices of the Meade Auxiliary Volunteer Corps.

Mr. Travis is from Eugene, Or., and went with the first expedition to Manila. He is now away on a furlough, but returns to duty in a few days as his time is nearly up. He secured his leave, by advice of the army physicians in order that he might recuperate from a severe spell of sickness, which had sent him to the hospital at Manila.

The house was well filled with an intelligent audience. The rostrum railing had been decorated with bunting, and a large picture of Washington draped in the folds of the American flag formed an agreeable background. The following preliminary vocal selections were rendered by local talent: A parody, "On the Banks of the Wabash," appropriate to the Maine disaster by Mr. Confer; song, "Guard the Flag," by a trio of young ladies of the Meade Auxiliary Corps, Misses Williams, Albright and Sampson; solo, The Rosary, by Miss Imogene Harding and responded to an encore, "Oh for a Breath of the Moorlands," Miss Draper was piano accompanist.

Judge Galloway introduced the speaker with a few remarks to the occasion.

Mr. Travis, proceeded rather in a narrative and descriptive style to explain what he had observed than in the manner of a lecture. The trip from San Francisco to Manila, and return was told of as well as the incidents and objects of curiosity encountered in strange lands. He spoke for an hour, and the utmost attention was paid him.

Milk and Mathematics.

When Thomas drove up to deliver the usual quart of white mixture, the gentleman of the house kindly inquired, "Thomas, how many quarts of milk do you deliver daily to your customers?"

"Ninety-one, sir."

"And how many cows have you?"

"Nine, sir."

The gentleman made some remarks about an early winter and the state of the roads, and then asked, "Thomas, how much milk per day do your cows average?"

"Seven quarts, sir."

"Ah, um!" said the gentleman, as he moved off.

Thomas looked after him, scratched his head, and all at once grew pale as he pulled out a short pencil and began to figure on the wagon cover: "Nine cows is nine, and I set down seven quarts under the cows and multiply. That's 63 quarts of milk. I told him I sold 91 quarts per day. Sixty-three from 91 leaves 28 and none to carry. Now, where do I get the rest of the milk? I'll be hanged if I haven't given myself away to one of my best customers by leaving a big cavity in these figures to be filled with water!"—London Sketch.

Italy in London.

Many Londoners have visited the Italian district, which lies in the neighborhood of Theobald's road and Hatton Garden, and some with inquiring minds have strolled up Leather lane and watched the Italian ice cream vendors and fortune telling women with pretty love birds, intermingled with the dirty, noisy, street hawkers, common to all London slums. It is amazing to learn how these Italians crowd together in the poky little houses of the courts and alleys. Generally a house is hired by an old padrone, who sublets to as many of his countrymen as he can respectably squeeze in. The cellars are utilized as sleeping apartments, and in the morning as many as 20, even 30, men will emerge from the bowels of the earth, blinking and winking in the daylight after a night spent in the cellars under one small dwelling house. A whole family, consisting of a husband and wife and eight or nine fanciulli of various ages, often sleep in one small garret or cellar.—Londage Magazine.

A Crusher.

Legge, bishop of Oxford, who had not youth as his excuse for his vanity, asked his friend Canning to come and hear his first episcopal sermon. They dined together afterward, and from the politician's silence the other ought to have known better than to push him, but being rather nettled he exclaimed, "Canning, you have said nothing to me about my sermon." "Well, it is short." "Oh," said the bishop, "it is better to be short than tedious." "But," replied Canning, "you were that too."

Athletic Millionaires.

Two English boxing missionary workers were recently introduced by the Rev. A. J. Robinson to a Birmingham audience in these words:

"You Birmingham chaps have a lot of athletics, and quite right too. The two missionaries are both old athletes, you will be interested to learn. One, an old chum of mine, was in the Cambridge eight, and the other was famous among his fellows as a jumper. He could jump as high as his head."—Liverpool Mercury.

Why Maud Blushed.

Bobby (at the breakfast table)—Maud, did Mr. Jules take any of the umbrellas or hats from the hall last night?

Maud—Why, of course not! Why should he?

Bobby—That's just what I'd like to know. I thought he did because I heard him say when he was going out, 'I am going to steal just one,' and— Why, what's the matter, Maud?—London Fan.

Robbed the Grave.

A startling incident of which Mr. John Oliver of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: "I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back and sides, no appetite—gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Fortunately, a friend advised 'Electric Bitters,' and to my great joy and surprise, the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks and am now a well man. I know they saved my life, and robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50 cents, guaranteed at Geo. A. Harding's Drug Store.

In Memoriam.

WHEREAS, The Almighty God in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to permit the cold hand of death to take from us an esteemed and beloved fellow officer, County Superintendent H. S. Strange, and

WHEREAS, He was a faithful attendant and competent official so long as his strength permitted; while stricken with a fatal disease, he was persistent in his efforts for the benefit and the education of mankind, Therefore be it,

Resolved, That we, the county officers of the county of Clackamas, state of Oregon herewith express our love and appreciation of his noble example of unselfish devotion and service of education

Resolved, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to his beloved helpmeet and companion.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of Clackamas county, a copy be sent to the bereaved family and a copy furnished the local papers for publication.
