FIRELIGHT PICTURES.

The grey dusk of a wintry twilight Comes on with a sudden chill; Damp fogs gather tow o'er the river, Sharp winds sweep down from the hill.

I turn from the dim, dreary outlook To bask in the firelight's glaw, And gaze, while dreamily musing, On pictures that come and go.

A child in the vine-wreathed cottage, Happy the whole day long; A maiden with heart-free fancies, Filling her hours with song.

A lover was wooing and winning His bride, so gentle and fair; A home where love in humble guise Brings blessing rich and rare.

Sweet smiles on wee tender faces To lighten a toilsome way: The comforting clasp of friendship's hand, Crowning a sober day.

Ah, the changing pictures tell me The story of passing years; Its joys, its triumphs and gricafe Brought out with sorrow and tears.
