Lee Harding Writes to His Folks About War in the Philippines.

MALINTA, P. I., March 30, 1899. My Dear Folks. - After almost another emost exciting week, I have a chance to write, but in another part of the country. Mulinta, as does many other such places, consists of a large stone church (now a fortified mass of stone) and one or two farm houses. We are about 10 miles From Manila and about 17 miles from Malolos, on the Manila and Dongapan entilroad. Probably I had better start From the last letter, then I will make whings more clear.

March 31.—Had to stop suddenly last esvening, but am off guard now so can

This is the climax day of the Filipino war, as Malelos, the insurgent capital, was taken this morning at 10:15 without apposition by the enemy. Now I will go

On the 24th our regiment having been cance more brought together with the exception of H company, marched away for Colooncan. After having waited all afternoon for darkness we took the grenches vacated by the Kansas regiment where we spent the night. About 6900 yards away were the insurgent trenches. Both armies had done nothing except fire a few shots for about six weeks. During the night we were entertained by the enemy shooting at us, welling, and blowing their bugles. As our calls were blown they tried to repeat them, when all would laugh as if it were great fun. But their fun was soon to end, as we learned that on the morrow a general advance toward Malolos would the commenced.

Soon after dawn the next morning the fun began with the firing of shells into the insurgents lines from a battery next to our company. After a little breakfast 300 across a rice field that afforded no yesterday. protection while the insurgents were in Mr. Kenneke is in the furniture and trenches. First one section would fire a few rounds, then the next, aintil the word came to advance. Even while we were somewhat protected several more men were wounded. It was at this last line of trenches that the insurgents were absolutely certain that we would never take, as some of the best of us. As we started across that field the most awful hail of lead that we have received came at us. We would advance we crossed the field to within 150 yards been sounded and away the whole line Salem, where they will make their home. went never to stop until the trenches had been taken, not even then, not until we were forced to stop by the river. Across this the niggers had retreated by means of a bridge, which they blew up after the last man had crossed. Gantenbein, the only member of Co. I wounded was shot above the knee with a brass slug. It went straight through but did very little damage. One of our boys heard today that already it is healing, so we soon expect to see him.

As usual, the strange Providence watched over us and saw that we got through safely with the exception of the one named. Col. Summers congratutated us on our luck. We had been through the thickest of it, and yet we escaped harm from the enemy. One man, who was not a member of Co. I, but who was with us, was wounded was an M Co. man. The dead and wounded were soon taken from the field and eared for. A hospital man who was firing out of a window was shot in the upper lip and came out the left ear. Lieut, Campbell called me to dress his wound, so it was while taking him to the doctors' temporary place of business that I saw a few wounded natives. They were well cared for,
