Very Human.

Teacher—Once upon a time there were two rich men, one of whom made his fortune by honest industry, while the other made his by fraud. Now, which of these two men would you prefer to be?

Just Where He Was Wise.

Solomon is reported to have been a man of great wisdom, but we have no record of his ever having been questioned by a 6-year-old child.—St. Louis Star.

New formed lakes, canals, etc., often become mysteriously populated with fish. This is believed to be effected by birds which, having been feeding on fish spawn elsewhere, alight in the new waters and drop some of the spawn from their bills.

NEW CURE FOR COBRABITES.

A Yarn that Will Shake Up American Snake Story Inventors.

American inventors of snake stories must look to their laurels. The educated Bengali has entered into competition, and judging from the sample given in good faith by a native paper at Calcutta he will be hard to beat. Some time back the lovely daughter of a wealthy Zemindar was bitten by a cobra and died in the course of a few hours. As her remains were being conveyed to the Ganges for sepulture a passing patriarch of reverend mien proposed that he should be allowed to experiment with resuscitation. As he bore a high reputation as a professor of occult science, the sorrowing relatives readily consented.

The sage then obtained three crows, and after praying very energetically threw the shells on the ground. Instantly one disappeared, and the spectators were wondering what had become of it when a huge cobra burst out of the adjacent jungle, bearing the missing crow on its forehead. It must have been a humble sort of reptile, for when ordered by the sage to suck the wound on the deceased lady it at once complied, and then died to save further trouble. Within an hour its human victim had quite recovered, and went off merrily with her husband and relatives, none the worse for her little adventure. "Such was the marvelous treatment," says the narrator, "of the peasant, Monia Dux, professor of the occult science, which, with the spread of the so called western civilization, has almost died out of the land." What we cannot understand is why snakes committed more atrocities when occult science was in its prime than under western civilization.

The French Supreme Court.

The constitution of the cour de cassation is as follows: One president, or chief justice, stands at the head of the organization, having below him three subordinate presidents, each of whom has charge of a chamber. Next in order come 45 minor judges, styled councillors, 15 for each chamber. Besides these, strictly judicial functionaries, who are appointed for life, there are seven official advocates, one of whom is a sort of attorney general to the whole body, while two practice in each of the divisions.

To this staff must be added four chief clerks and about a score of minor officials. Of the three chambers, the first is a court of requests, serving to decide what cases shall be allowed to go before the civil and criminal chambers respectively. Eleven judges in all the divisions are necessary to form a quorum. The courts only sit three days a week, from 12 to 4, so that this huge machine does its work very slowly.

Nature's Cunning.

Protective mimicry, that cunning device of nature to preserve animals from their enemies, is well shown in the eggs of certain fishes, notably the Californian shark known as Gyocephalus francisci. The shark is of a singular habit, lurking among rocks, and its dark egg resembles a leaf of kelp or seaweed folded up spirally. It is deposited among the beds of kelp and clings to the leaves by the edges of the spirals. The young shark bursts open the end of the egg and swims away. Another shark's egg of the Pacific coast has tentacles which clasp the seaweed and also imitate its appearance.

Peerless.

"So you have no house of lords in this country?" said the visiting Englishman.
"No, we haven't," replied the American. "This is a nation without a peer."—Harper's Bazar.

THE MODERN ENGLISHMAN.

An Incident Which Aptly Illustrates His Deliberateness.

To illustrate the deliberateness of the modern Englishman let me tell of a hat which blew off a mechanic's head on the top of a bus crossing Albert bridge. A stiff breeze blew up the Thames, and the hat was whirled against the side of the bridge and then went spinning down the footway in the opposite direction from that which the omnibus pursued. "I say," said the mechanic, reaching over and touching the driver on the shoulder; "me 'at's blowed off." The driver flinched a moment at this sudden interruption, then took a tighter grasp of the reins and clucked to the horses to quicken their pace. The hat and the vehicle spun along in opposite ways. "I say, driver," said the mechanic; "me 'at's blowed off." The driver flinched again, but now his mind grasped the situation, though most unwillingly. "It 'as, 'as it!" he said, turning to the man. "Well, then, that'll teach you to buy 'ats to fit your 'ead. I 'ad a 'ole lot of 'ats blow off before I made up me mind to get 'em to fit me 'ead. After that I 'ad no more trouble."

The hat was still bowling along and was now at the farther end of the bridge. The mechanic looked at it dully. I was in a fever of gratuitous impatience for the bus to stop or for the man to climb down. The driver turned back to his work and clucked to his horses, who quickened their gait. Just then a vagrant stopped the flight of the hat and ran and caught the bus and got a penny for his pains. So every one was happy, even I.—Julian Ralph in Harper's Magazine.

Payn's Fearful Writing.

James Payn's chirography is something fearful to contemplate. It is simply execrable. The Academy tells a nice story about Payn's "bewildering handwriting." Miss Jane Barlow sent a poem as a first contribution to The Cornhill when Payn was its editor. The clerk of the lady receiving a brief line which she interpreted as follows: "I have no use for silly verses."

Of course Miss Barlow indulged in copious tears. There never was such an ill-mannered snub. Then she commenced to study the scrawl. Now came a gleam of light, for she dimly made out what it really was. "I hope to use your pretty verses."

Alas, when you are, as a poet, "declined with thanks," there is today no possibility of error, for the fatal missive is always typewritten.

Feminine Features.

"While woman may have her face on the dollar," said the corned philosopher, looking thoughtfully at the coin. "yet, to tell the truth, she is more apt to have her eye on the 38 cents."—Indianapolis Journal.

The depth of water affects the speed of steamers very considerably, the vessels moving more slowly in shallow than in deep water.
