Next morning O'Meara found a strange operator at the Chicago end of the wire, and when he inquired for Miss Davidson was told that she was very ill. The poor fellow realized now, if he never had before, that he was deeply in love with a woman be had never seen. He became so fretful and irritable as to excite comment among the others in the office.

"What on earth is the matter with O'Mears?" asked one of the operators on the opposite side of the "quad" of the man who sat at the next instru-

"I guess he's in love with the Chicago girl who is sick." was the reply. One morning the answer made by the Chicago operator to O'Meara's inquiry as to Miss Davidson's condition contained but one word-"Dead."

O'Mears uttered a kind of mosn, and his head fell upon his desk. When one of the chiefs aroused him, he found the young man's face flushed and his eyes bloodshot. O'Meara was sent home, where he remained for weeks, suffering from a severe attack of brain fever. When at last be had recovered and returned to the office to report for duty, the chief told him to take his usual seat at the Chicago quadruplex

"If you'd just as lief, give me another wire, I'd rather have it." O'Meara said "I don't think I care to work with Chicago any more."

There was a twinkle in the eye of the chief as he said

"You used to do some fine work on that Chicago wire. "Perhaps so." O'Mears replied sadly, but I had a fine operator to work

"Well," said the chief, "that's a fine operator there yet-the same one. I be lieve, that was there before.

"That cannot be-for she is dead. This with a great sob.

"I think you had better return to the old wire for the present at least," the chief said. "Then if you are not satisfied I will transfer you to some other

O'Meara walked slowly over to his old place to relieve the man who was at the moment receiving some messages from Chicago. As he neared the instrument and heard the characters coming with a dearly loved and familiar sound his heart almost stopped beating so overwhelming was the surge of emotion He listened for a moment omtil at the beginning of another message came the signal of the sending operator. "A. D."

"Amy Davidson, of course," was his "Don't trifle with me," O'Meara ator, making way for O'Meara. "It was only a rumor that some chuckle bended ass accepted as a fact. She has been back at work for two weeks or more. "Is that really you, Amy?" He gave his own signal "O. M."

"Yes, Charley, and I'm glad you are well again." Her reply was as fluttering as his question had been tremulous. Some of the operators in the New York office wondered at seeing a young man sitting at an instrument with tears of joy streaming down his face, while in the Chicago office there was surprise because a girl was crying and smiling at the same time.

When he had recovered his equa-primity, O'Meara said

"They told me you were dead and I believed it. The shock nearly killed

"It was merely a rumor, I'm happy to say. But when I came back to work I was greatly depressed at hearing you were so ill. Now we will both be well and happy again."

There was more of this pleasantry, and then Miss Davidson seriously agreed to marry her distant lover. After many more conversations on the wire it was agreed that Miss Davidson and O'Meara should meet at a half way point-Pittsburg being finally selected-where they should be married. This course was chosen in the hope that the consummation of their peculiar courtship could be accomplished secretly, thus avoiding the good natured, but embarrassing the blood, clean the liver, invigorate the chaffing of their fellow operators.

But that wire on which they made their arrangements ran through the Pittsburg office, where there were automatic repeating instruments. An operator standing beside the repeaters one day overheard the final arrangements; heard the description each gave the other by which to insure identification Record, Baltimore, Md " at the depot and told all about it to the Pittsburg operators, who thereupon determined to make the occasion of the wedding interesting. A committee was appointed to watch the meeting of the couple and to prepare for a reception.

ahead of Miss Davidson, as had been agreed upon, and was at the station on the following day when her train pulled in from the west. His heart was beating wildly as he scanned the alighting passengers, and he was too preoccupied to notice that he was being watched by half a dozen young men.
