Show me a man devoid of such a feelsight of his country's flag, whose ear is deaf to his country's call in her hour of need, and I will show you a man whose principle of action is that of greed and selfishness; a man without honor or nation without power or influence for good in any direction, a people with no sense of national or private honor, where passion and of appetite; where the growth of moral and intellectual life is dwarfed and stunted, and I will invariably show you a people that lacks ennobling sentiment or principle of action. Love of country is a sentiment that ennobles private and public character. Where it is cherished, thrives and prospers every good and noble cause. Such a nation enjoys the respect and confidences of her sister nations; the arts and sciences flourish, schools and literature foster and disseminate knowledge, woman is raised to her proper position of honor and respect, and men will lay down even life itself for the common good.

Wherever love of liberty and devotion to country have actuated the hearts of a people, there has flourished physical, intellectual and moral prosperity. There men are actuated by motives of justice and right rather than those of violence to a decline of these noble sentiments, she will point out to us also the prevalence and growth of private corruption, public

But liberty is not license, and that a free government may not degenerate into anarchy and lawlessness, the ballot, that sovereign scepter of the freeman, must not be wielded by the hands of ignorance. While we contemplate with just ing, one whose heart remains cold at pride the advantage of a government which make it possible for even choppers and plowman to attain to such eminence as was reached by a Lincoln and a Garfield, we must not lose sight of the rocks upon which the ship of and Consumption; used through the a state might founder. It is therefore to the home and the school that our government and its cherished institutions must look for their perpetuation. The state and the nation must guard well these fountainheads of future citizenship.

Hence it is that tonight we plant the flag upon that grandest institution, that corner-stone of our common country, the common school.
