When a candidate is successful now-adays, you never see it printed that "he defeated his opponents in the convention." It usually tells how one factional boss downed the other factional boss and is now the political dictator of his county or state, as the case may be.

How would this do for a plank in the Democratic national platform: "We deplore the conditions that have come upon the country during the administration of William McKinley, and we demand such legislation as will restore the country to the commercial and industrial conditions that existed for three years prior to his election and inauguration."

We have sent to China both a military force and a naval force. The sole object is to rescue citizens of our own courtry in peril there. The interview in which Lord Wolseley expresses the opinion that "China possesses every requisite for overrunning the world" is possibly intended to impress the British Ministry with a sense of the magnitude of the work of dividing China among the several European powers. There is a vast difference between ability to overrun the world and ability to keep the world from overrunning China. The 400,000,000 of people in China are only about one-fourth of the world's population. It affords material for an army which, when well drilled, well led and well armed, would be a match against any force the world could send against it; but the advantage of fighting at home should not be overlooked. All the European nations except Russia would have to transport troops by sea several thousand miles, at a cost which will double the ordinary expenses of war. Even the movement of Russian troops would be delayed by unfinished links in the Siberian road. So far as may be judged by dispatches, the European powers seem to think that it remains with them to say whether or not China shall be divided among them. The opinion of Lord Wolseley that China is more likely to overrun than to be overrun may infuse a little discretion into pegotiations for the restoration of

What to Do. There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extra-ordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its won-derful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best.
