A FATAL JUMP. George Fancher Dies From Injuries Sustained in Dismounting From an Electric Car. George B. Fancher died Saturday afternoon from injuries sustained while attempting to dismount from an Oregon City streetcar at Tenth street. Young Fancher was returning from Portland on the 9:15 car, and when it reached Tenth street in this city he jumped off in the opposite direction from which the car was moving. The motion of the car threw him violently to the brick pavement, striking on the back of his head. The base of the skull was fractured. When picked up he was bleeding profusely from the mouth and ears, both eardrums having been ruptured. Conductor E. Blyeu and Motorman G. Keller were in charge of the car, and when the accident occurred they were the first to lend aid to the unfortunate young man and among the last to leave him. Dr. Sommer was called to attend him and he was driven to the home of his mother, where he died the next day. Fancher was an employe of the Willamette paper mills and was about 28 years of age. He was buried in the City cemetery Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock, the services being held from the Presbyterian church, Revs. A. J. Montgomery and E. S. Bollinger officiating. At the grave the services were under the auspices of the Woodmen of the World, of which order he was a member. An inquest over Fancher's remains was held, Coroner Strickland desiring to ascertain whether or not the East Side railway was in any wise blameable for the accident. The jury unanimously rendered the following verdict: "We, the jury, after due investigation, find that deceased's name was George B. Fancher, aged about 28 years; that he came to his death at Oregon City, Oregon, on September 7, 1900, death resulting from fracture of the skull and concussion of the brain from a fall caused by willfully dismounting from a car of the East Side Railway Company on the 6th of September, 1900, while the car was in motion; that we exonerate the said railway company and its employes from all blame or negligence in said death."
