editor happened to be absent. On one occasion he handed some to a representative of another paper who chanced to be in the building. The man had been employed on The Tribune some years previously, so his face was familiar to Mr. Medili, while the faces of the men then actually in his employ were not.

One day he suddenly inquired what had become of the old night editor. "He's in Boston." was the reply.

"Well, I want him," said Mr. Medill, It was explained that the man had an excellent place in Boston and probably would not care to come back, but Mr. Medill persisted that he wanted him. "I know him," he said, "and I want a
