Bitnd Musician Dead.

A familiar sight on the streets of Oregon City from time to time has been two blind musicians. Word comes that the woman is dead . The Oregonian has the following pathetic reference to her death:

"Many people in Portland have no doubt noticed the blind street musicians, E. D. Thompson and wife, who have played a small organ on Morrison and Washington streets for several years, Mrs. Thompson died last week at her home at Caple's Landing, to the great regret of those who miss her kindly, peaceful face, and the restful, old-fashioned tunes she played. Last Saturday the husband was seen standing at the northwest corner of Fourth and Yambill streets with a troubled expression on his nightless face, and a man who knew him went over and said: 'Mr. Thompson, can I do anything for you?'

"'I wish to go to Holeman's undertaking rooms. My wife is dead,' was the answer. He was safely piloted across, and, after he became calmer, he remarked: 'Yes, we're parted at last. She has gone first, and I'm left alone. But I wish to arrange about her funeral, and I've the money with me

"The business details were talked over and Mr. Thompson suddenly said : would like to see the funeral robe, to place her in her last resting place."

" 'Certainly,' said the attendant, and when the robe was given him the blind man felt it all ever, with loying fingers. His face lighted up for an instant with a sudden tenderness, and he at last said with a sigh : 'Yes, it's all right.'

"Then he walked away to his lonely home-alone."

THE OLD PIONEER CLOCK. (By T. J. Kirk, Highland, Or.) The old family clock, for many years One of Oregon's pioneers, In fifty-two the Plains it crossed And never yet its service lost,

It reaches the ceiling, it graces the Faithful old clock by night and by day It waits for no one but keeps running

It stands in the corner, stately and tall,

Sixty five years it's adorned the wall And measured the fleet of time, And answered true to all who call By giving the correct time, Its face is somewhat faded sow

Its hands are browned with age, but right: The roses that adorn its brow Yet show their color clear and bright. The pendulum has that faithful swing

Year after year goes to and fro And the old brase bell has the same It had sixty-five years ago. The old key too, it has a call Once a week and that is all Each time to raise eight pounds of weight

Its term of run of days are eight. In the quietude of night We often listen to hear it strike. Without ceasing it still goes on And tells the hour of early morn.

By nature many have run their race
