WOOD FELL ON HIM.

John Porter, a Teamster from Garfield, Killed in Portland. John Porter, a driver for W. W. McBride, of Portland, was killed at that place Wednesday, by some heavy pieces of wood falling upon him. The accident occurred at the foot of Jefferson street, where his horse took fright and ran away, dragging him a distance of 40 feet. According to the evidence adduced at the coroner's inquest, the accident was caused by Porter and a fellow employe, named John W. Carson, loading the wagon too heavily in front, causing the rack of the wagon to tip over with the weight of the firewood. They had one tier completed in the front of the wagon and Porter was on top of the wagon, when one of the timbers fell off and hit one of the horses, the animal taking fright and running away. Porter lost his balance and fell between the horses, with the wood falling upon him. The horses ran a distance of 40 feet, dragging Porter along, collided with a post and stopped. When his fellow-workman reached him, he was buried beneath the wood which had crushed the life out of his body. The deceased was formerly a resident of Garfield and leaves a mother, brother and three sisters. One sister, Mrs. John Page, resides at Gladstone, and the other two, Mrs. Mathew Patterson and Mrs. C. F. Harver, live at Garfield. His mother and his brother, Wm. Porter, also live at that place. His father died about three years ago. It is easier to keep well than get cured.
