FRANCHISE IS VOID

P. C. & O. R. Company Want a New Arrangement Made.

EXPECT BIG FREIGHT BUSINESS.

Council Is Opposed to Granting Freight Transportation Privileges on Main Street.

When the old East Side Railway, now the Portland City & Oregon Railway Company was built, the company was given a 50-year franchise from Oregon City to run cars on Main street and about four years ago were granted a franchise for 10 years to run an express car. The original franchise said nothing about freight cars and the encyclopedia of law declares that a street car franchise means passenger cars, unless freight cars or express cars, or some other kind of cars are specified.

Last December the company applied for a 43-year franchise, giving them the right to lay a double track on Main street and to run a passenger, freight and express business. The franchise was granted but in January a new council came into power and declared the ordinance void as it was passed at an adjourned meeting, contrary to the provisions of the charter. Two months ago one of the company's freight car operators was arrested for violating an ordinance which forbids running freight cars on the streets. He pleaded the 43 year franchise ordinance as his justification, but Recorder Curry ruled that this was no justification, as the ordinance was void. Whereupon the company took a writ of review to the circuit court and it will presumably come up for action in the November term. Meanwhile the company have made overtures to the city for a compromise ordinance, but no decision or agreement has yet been reached. The officers of the company talk as though they would consent to the annulment of the present ordinance if a new one is granted them, but the council does not seem disposed to grant any freight privileges on Main street. Individual opinion, among the council, is opposed to giving away franchises that may be of large value in the future, and it is also opposed to permitting the city's principal thoroughfare to become a passage for freight trains.

In fact some of the councilmen are not in favor of cars running on Main street at all, and say that such a franchise should never have been given to the company, but they would have no objection to freight trains running on Water street, where the track should have been placed. The only obstacle in the way is the Oregon City Transportation Company's wharf, which could easily be overcome by a trestle.

Another point enters into the question and that is the payment for street improvement. The ordinance passed four years ago granting the company a 10 year franchise to run an express car on Main street, provides for the payment of lein against the company and specifies that $1800 shall be paid each year until $5406 14 is paid with eight per cent interest from May 31, 1894. A failure of the company to comply with the provisions works a forfeiture of the ordinance and the council claims that the company have made no payments since last February. There is also a difference of opinion as to the amount due from the company and at present a license of $25 a year is being paid. This license was authorized if the lein was paid in full prior to June 1, 1902, but after that time the council may determine the amount to be charged.

Wirt Minor, of the Portland law firm of Cotton, Teal and Minor, attorneys for the Portland City and Oregon Railway Company, was in town Tuesday in consultation with the mayor and the city attorney in relation to the granting of a new freight franchise to the company, but no definite arrangement has been made.

The Oregon City & Southern Railway Company, which is an extension of the P. C. & O. Railway, is contemplating the construction of a big warehouse in Canemah, preparatory to enlarging their freight traffic. While the crossings have not been constructed over the Southern Pacific Company's tracks, pending the acceptance of the report of the commission appointed to report on advisability of a grade or other crossing, the O. C. & S. Company evidently assume that the report favoring a grade crossing will be acceptable and the interlocking switches are already ordered. It is expected that the up-river boats will transfer their freight at Canemah, near the end of the trolley line where the warehouse is to be constructed, and save lockage charges of 50 cents per ton.
