

IN MEMORY OF THE DEAD

Solemn Ceremonies Held at the Court House Yesterday.

ADDRESSES BY PROMINENT MEN

Services for Martyred President Attended By People From All Parts of the County.

Two thousand people assembled at the court house yesterday afternoon to observe the day set apart by proclamation for memorial services as a tribute to the memory of our martyred President. The circuit court room was crowded to suffocation, and hundreds of people filled the square and lined the street in front of the building. After each address was delivered in the court room the speakers stood on the steps of the court house and addressed the throng in the open air. The building was heavily draped in mourning, and the national colors were hung with crepe. All of the stores were closed during the services, and the public offices and schools did not open. Flags were hung at half mast over the city and bells were tolled.

The services opened with sacred music by Anton Zill's orchestra and Judge Ryan, who presided, made the opening address. He said:

"A mournful event is this, that has brought us together to add our tribute to that mighty chorus of affection, which, this day, from the broad Atlantic in the east to our own Pacific, from the Great Lakes in the north to the Gulf of Mexico in the south, has found expression from the lips and from the hearts of over seventy millions of good, patriotic American citizens, to the memory of a beloved and martyred President.

"What a tragedy! A great and good man; a cruel, cowardly assassin; a dastardly deed; and a nation, nay, the whole world mourns.

"Wm. McKinley, president, guiding our Nation in the path of right, by his kindly acts gained the respect of us all. Wm. McKinley, statesman, whose work in securing wise and timely legislation benefited all and won our esteem: Wm. McKinley, soldier, who in company with these brave old men, here assembled to honor his memory, on the field of battle, in his country's cause, performed acts of valor that excited our admiration: Wm. McKinley, citizen and husband, whose devotion to truth and principle, and loving care of wife has made him loved of all; he is gone. We can hardly realize that he, who less than two short weeks ago, was the embodiment of manly vigor, the admired, honored and respected president of the most enlightened nation of the earth, is now gone—assassinated by one of its citizens—and while it all seems strange and incomprehensible, let us, in our hour of sorrow and loss, follow the example of our illustrious dead, and in submission say, 'It is the way of God; His will, not ours, be done.

Let us therefore now bow the head and join in prayer to Him, who ruleth in all things."

Rev. A. J. Montgomery offered prayer, and the choir sang "Nearer My God To Thee." Judge Ryan read the following resolutions:

"Standing in the presence of a great national calamity, the citizens of Oregon City and Clackamas county have assembled for the purpose of giving expression to sentiments common to all patriotic citizens wherever the Stars and Stripes float, and wherever our national supremacy is recognized.

"In the death of President McKinley, not only our nation but the whole world, stands appalled. In this tragedy, which has shaken the world, we find startling evidence of the fact that, in our endeavors to make our country the home of liberty and the haven of refuge for the oppressed of every land, our hospitality and confidence have been abused, and under the shelter of our glorious flag and our liberal laws the anarchist conspirator and political assassin breeds and flourishes.

"Now that the tragedy is consummated, the broken law becomes a shield of the man who has abused its privileges, and who preaches a creed that holds it in utter contempt. As central figures in this great tragedy there stands, upon one hand, the consummate flower of American manhood. Upon the other, there cringes the malignant spawn of ideas wholly foreign to the spirit of our institutions.

"We stand utterly mute and powerless in our attempts to properly characterize the deed, overwhelmed with the thought that we are in a sense responsible for allowing the liberty we advocate for being so debauched, but determined that an end must be put to that toleration which permits the teaching of sedition, assassination and destruction under the guise of free speech and free press.

"Under such circumstances the death of President McKinley would have been recognized as a calamity. The manner and the occasion of his death have intensified our sense of loss. In the capable exercise of his official duties, he had inspired the confidence of the world in his great ability, and in his manifestations of a kindly spirit of conciliation he united in closer bonds the whole American people. His death, occurring at the very zenith of his power and of his achievements, emphasized the world's conviction of his worth, and has drawn into still closer relations of amity and of unity, all factions, and all parties and all sections. It has rekindled the patriotic spirit of our people. It has disarmed the partisan. It has smothered the fire of passion. It has intensified the devotion of every American citizen to the flag, and to the Constitution, and to the laws. It has awakened in every patriotic heart, a hitherto latent determination that every man who claims the protection of our institutions, shall bow in deference to the supreme majesty of the law.

"In the death of our martyred President, we recognize the loss of one who, as man, as citizen, as ruler, was faithful in the discharge of every duty. A firm friend, a generous foe, a good soldier, a filial son, a devoted husband, a patriotic citizen, he embodied the highest type of Christian manhood, while as President he displayed such magnificent qualities of leadership as to place him in the company of the wisest and greatest statesmen of all ages.

"Deplored his loss, but bowing in submission to the decrees of Providence, we accept the heritage of his great name and example as one of the richest endowments of American citizenship, while pledging our renewed devotion to the fundamental principles which are the common heritage of patriotic American citizens of every party name.

THOS. F. RYAN,
CHARLES B. MOORE,
WM. GALLOWAY,
J. C. ZINER,
G. B. DIMICK,
Committee on Resolutions."

Chopin's "Funeral March" was rendered by the orchestra. Rev. W. S. Grim delivered a short address. He said: "The American people, the nation and the whole world are in mourning to-day for President McKinley. Not because he was a man, though man is God's crowning thought in creation; it is not because he was a citizen, though true citizenship is the highest conception of man's life; it was because he was the embodiment of the life of the nation. The blow was not struck at him as a man, but at the principle of liberty he represented. Over his body the nation will climb to greater freedom. The principle of freedom will finally triumph over evil."

Judge William Galloway said: "Our martyred presidents were the peers of Jefferson and Jackson. McKinley was broad in statesmanship and in religion. There is not a Catholic altar in the land but what was dressed in mourning; there is not a Catholic church in the country but what was sending up prayers to Heaven for the repose of his soul. He was a leader who twice defeated the democratic party, but could that party restore him to the executive chair and to the bosom of his family, it would willingly make any sacrifice. So deep is his hold upon the masses of the people that those who wore the gray are vying with his comrades in war in sorrow over his death."

Colonel Robert A. Miller said: "We have come to mourn over the death of the president of the United States. A nation is bowed in grief—dispelling all distinctions of race or color, each citizen, loving his country and its laws, with contrite heart pauses from his daily avocation to do homage to the dead and to meditate upon the responsibilities of citizenship.

"At such a crisis as this society awakens to newer responsibilities and newer duties. It was hoped the political assassin belonged to old world conditions and not to this free land of ours, but the awakening, dire and awful in its consequences, overlook the American people in the dust and platitude of their power.

"In humiliation we stand convicted before the peoples of the earth that we have harbored in our midst that most execrable of all human beings—the assassin and the anarchist. In the olden time there was forced along side of the Savior of mankind—the Judas Iscariot. In the early history of our Republic was found a Benedict Arnold. But in greater shame and humiliation we most own that there was born and bred on the free soil of the United States the assassin of our president. The centuries cannot and will not get the crime.

"He who conspires against government, against law and order, against society and against civilization should have no resting place in a Republic."

Father Hillebrand said in substance that there are days of rejoicing and days of mourning and that this will be a day of mourning for the future. The people should guard carefully against the introduction of penitential and new ideas and must beware of the socialist-anarchist.

Hon. C. B. Moores said: "It is a reproach to the American people that 200 anarchists can gather together in a little village in Wisconsin and plot over the assassination of the president and to exalt and drink to the health of the assassin. They should be buried under the terms of law, buried so deep that they could not be resurrected in time or eternity. It is a reproach to the people of the United States that 200 socialists assembled in Chicago and deliberately resolved that the assassination was a matter which did not concern them. We are a law-abiding people but there are times when we should take the law into our own hands. The American people have neglected their duty in not exacting laws making it impossible under the most severe penalties for people to give utterance to such sentiments. It is too late to reach them after those sentiments have been put into execution. This occasion is not entirely a matter of sentiment. It calls for something practical on the part of the people in the way of legislation. Emma Goldman and her disciples should never be allowed to give utterance to the treasonable sentiment to which they have given voice during the past few days. It is a reproach to the American press that her utterances should be given space in their columns."

Rev. J. H. Heaven saw in McKinley a Christian president and a Christian husband. He was an ideal Christian in his daily life. Mr. Heaven spoke from a religious standpoint and alluded to the death of the president, who in his last hours sought consolation from the Creator.

State Senator Brownell expressed a sentiment against anarchy and the threat against the institutions of our country; against the law, and against our theory of government. He took a strong ground in favor of the Oregon legislature passing stringent laws against the advocacy of principles or ideas leading to anarchy. The speaker paid a glowing tribute to President McKinley, who went to war when only 18 years of age, to his congressional record, to his record as president and to his general statesmanship. He also drew a picture of the injustice and the wrong of the crime, when we think that his whole life was given toward fostering principles that tended to a broader liberty and higher citizenship for all our people.

Other addresses were made by Judge G. E. Hayes, Representatives A. S. Dresser and G. L. Hedges, Rev. Phillip K. Hammond, Attorney W. S. U'Fen, Rev. A. J. Montgomery and C. A. Williams. The services closed with prayer by Rev. E. S. Bollinger and the singing of "America" by the audience.

Mayor Dimick's proclamation reads:

"To the citizens of Oregon City: Anarchy has aimed and struck a blow at the government which our forefathers founded in the interest of freedom for all the people of our land. Our beloved President, William McKinley, as the chief representative of the people, has fallen by the hand of the assassin, and the nation is plunged into deepest grief by this dreadful act.

"Every true American citizen desires to respect the memory of one who has labored so long and so faithfully in service for his country and has lived so excellent a life.

"Now, in accordance with the proclamation heretofore issued by Hon. T. T. Geer, Governor of Oregon, notice is hereby given that memorial services will be held at the county courthouse on Thursday, September 19, A. D. 1901, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. Let us all meet there at the time above mentioned, and together pay our respects to our late President.

"G. B. DIMICK, Mayor."

AT ST. PAUL'S CHURCH.

In accordance with the proclamation of the president a memorial service was held in St. Paul's Episcopal church Thursday at 10 o'clock. The beautiful burial service of that church was carried out in full and the rector, Rev. P. K. Hammond, delivered a touching and eloquent sermon on the life of him for whom the Nation weeps. The church was draped in mourning, and the floral decorations were white asters. The choir sang "Nearer My God To Thee," "Lead Kindly Light" and "America."
