MEAT ONCE A DAY.

Theory That Average Family's Food Is Too Heavy For Health.

Our mistakes in eating begin with our breakfast. In many families, perhaps in most, this meal commences with fruit and cereal, goes on to chops and potatoes, hot breads and coffee and At noon, when a man's stomach is only report was served. beginning to rest from all this, he has ter, coffee and ple, while at home his wife has a slice of cold mest, a cup of tea and a piece of cake. Nor can be eat white bread, potatoes and pastry day after day without taviting dyspepsia. One has only to let a doctor trace back these diseases to their source to be quite certain on these points.

But If we decide to give up these the starchy vegetables, the white bread and heavy sweets, what have we left for the family meals? "Nothing," the distracted housewife will exclaim despairingly at first thought, but really there is, first of all, chicken, which is Harding, invaluable, for it may be cooked in a dozen different ways and seem a new dish each time, and turkey, duck and goose as well. Then there are the white meats, lamb and veal; fish in its multitudinous forms; there are game in its senson, vegetables and fruits, with numberiess varieties of soups, and the simple sweets, which are made prinforms of breads, Harper's Bazar.

A PLEASING PRENCH TRAIT.

Love Between Brothers a Strongly Marked Characteristic.

One of the ways in which the close union of French family life shows itself is the great affection of brothers for each other: There is an intimacy between them in good and evil fortune treats the latter as a drag on him, and perhaps scarcely feels that he is one. Louis and Charles Blanc, though so dissimilar in appearance, tastes, disposition, and married to women who disliked each other, were, morally speaking, Slamese twins until death severed the bond. The same might be said of the Garnier-Leon, of Ernest and Arthur Picard, of Puech, the sculptor, and his brother the deputy. Paul and Hippolyte Flaudrin, the painters, were known in their courts, the Rossys, the Marguerittes. It would be impossible to discern the work of one of any of these brothers from that of another. What is very differed strikingly in every characteristic from the other. The dissimilarity 20 p. m tic from the other. The dissimilarity wonders how brothers could be so onlike.
