SASH WINDOWS.

Probably a Dutch invention of the Seventeenth Century. The history of sash windows is some what obscure, but the probability is that they were a Dutch invention and that they were introduced into England soon after the revolution of 1688. this sense is the Dutch "sas," a sluice- Turner during her lingering illness, old English "sasse." In Queen Anne's reign they were yet so comparatively uncommon as to be mentioned as a special feature of houses that were advertised as "To let." In the Tatler, for instance, No. 178, May 27-30, 1710. there is this advertisement:

"To be lett, in Devonshire Square near Bishopsgar, a very good Brick House of 3 Rooms of a Floor, and a good Hail, with very good light and dark Closets, the whole House being well wainscoted, and sash'd with 30 Sash Lights, a very pleasant and con- are glad to get back, as there is no place venient Office below Stairs," etc.

France, where the first to put them up was Marshal de Lorge at his new house at Montmartre. Speaking of this, Lister in 1699 writes in his "Journey to Paris;" "We had the good forune here to find the marshal himself. He showed us his great such windows, low easily they might be lifted up and down and stood at any height, which contrivance, he said, he had out of England by a small model brought on purpose from thence, there being noth. the illness of her father. ing of this poise in windows in France before."-London Standard,

When you get up in the morning, take off everything again. This is the time to take a cold bath, very quickly, with vigorous rubbing. If for any reason you do not take the cold bath, rub your skin all over thoroughly with a rough towel. Don't be afraid of being nuked a little while.

There is no better tonic for the skin than nakedness. Take off everything. Give yourself a little hand massage. Exercise the muscles. Rub your skin with a coarse towel, anything, so as to spend a little time naked. Then put on fresh clothing.

People who wear the same clothes every night and day get themselves surrounded by an atmosphere of their own bodily emanations that is very unhealthy. Neither faith cures nor drug cures are of a particle of use to dirty people. Cleanliness is the first law of health. If this law be broken, it will be very little use to try any remedy.-Exchange.

How Water Freezes.

It used to puzzle all thinking people why ponds and rivers do not freeze beyond a certain depth. This depends on most curious fact-namely, that water is at its heaviest when it reaches 10 degrees F.-that is, 8 degrees above freezing point. On a frosty night as each top layer of water falls to 40 degrees it sinks to the bottom; therefore the whole pond has to drop to 40 degrees before any of it can freeze. At by at the next regular meeting of the last it is all cooled to this point, and then les begins to form. But les is a very had conductor of heat; therefore laid in fourteen different states of the It shuts off the freezing air from the big body of comparatively warm water underneath. The thicker it gets the more perfectly does it act as a great coat, and that is why even the Arctic ocean never freezes beyond a few feet in thickness.-Marine Jour-

She murmured something about hoping she would be able to congratulate him soon.

His big eyes covered her stendily, Do you really hope so? "Of course. But do tell me about the war. I'm just dying to know all about how it feels to be in battle." "There's nothing much to tell," be answered, somehow feeling buffled without quite knowing why. "It's awfully hot and dusty, and once in a while some poor fellow gets knocked over. There isn't anything much to see. One gets a throat like a limeklin; no trouble at all to raise a thirst. That's about all. But there's something

"There was once a young fellow at the Point," he began nervously. "Naturally he thought himself in love, but the curious thing is that he was in love. Fact is he didn't know any more about girls than you do about the native jargon of the Hindoo. He never had been with them. But oncewell, the sister of a classmate came visiting at the Point, and after that she was the only woman in the world that counted."

She settled herself more comfortably in the chair and smiled dazzlingly at him. Never a maiden more unconsclous of his ulterior meaning.

"How charmingly romantic! Do go on. I hope there will be immense difficulties in the way-another lover, obdurate parent, heartrending separation, mutual vows of undying fealty."

"No; there wasn't any obdurate parent. So far as I could find out her father hadn't any objections to my-to this young fellow-marrying his daughter. There were separations enough, He had to play hide and seek with the Apaches in Arizona for a year or two, but I never discovered that her though he appreclated it. "There was another lover," ne continued, eyes full on hers. "He was a man of a good deal of force, had made his own way in the world and was on the road to wealth. He could give her all the things that this lieutenant couldn't give her, the luxuries she had been used to all her life."

"Oh, I see. He could feed her on bonbons." This most innocently. "He could provide for her as she ought to be provided for."

"Still it is just conceivable that even a girl might weary of cating sweets the livelong year in and year out, isn't it?" she asked, with a touch of asper-

"Arizona is not exactly a place where a society girl would care to live."

"Of course he asked her whether she would like to go there. He didn't go away without giving her a chance, I виррыме.

The lieutenant flushed, "He simply confdu't ask her. The thing was unthinkable. He would have deserved to be shot if he had taken her out there to die of loneliness away from home." "So he left har to her bonbons. He can't have thought much of her. She was probably only a fancy of the mo-

"But you are quite wrong. He did. Pon't you see that it was because he cared so much for her that he could not ask her to share a lot like that with him? He went away and bore his hurt silently."

"That was very generous of him," she admitted cordially. "But you must be wrong about the officer, Lieutenant Weston. He couldn't have readly believed in the girl if he thought these fuxuries were more to her than the man she loved. If he had thought her a true woman be would not have healtated to give her the choice. It would not have been fair to her to go away without a word. He must have thought her a butterffy."

Weston's eyes grew eloquent. "Believe me, he knew her to be all things good, but he had so little to offer that he knew he had not the right to offer There are some things a man may not do."

She had nothing more to say. The rest was for him, "Besides, he did not know whether

Poverty and wealth and external distinctions of society appeared to me the accidents or life; love stood out a great verity to dwarf these. I made a pledge with myself then that if I lived I would find out whether you loved me or not. Long ago I should have asked you but for my pride. Today it is my pride to brush aside my

Imprompts Speeches,

James Russell Lowell is recorded as saying that he always liked to prepare his impromptu speeches. At a dinner given to Mr. Longfellow during a visit to London it was agreed that no set speeches should be noide.

After the fruit and coffee had been discussed, Admiral Farragut arose and protested that they could not dream of parting without hearing from Mr. Gladatone. Mr. Gladstone began by assuring the company that he was of the mind of

Lord Palmerston, who said, "Better

a dinner of berbs where no speaking is than whitebuit and oratory therewith." His "remarks" developed into an eloquent oration. He had read the works. of the American poet and quoted passages from several of his poems, and concluded by paying a splendid tribute to Mr. Longfellow's attninments. The subject of this superb panegyric was deeply touched, and replied without rising in a few imposty chosen phrases, prefaced with the remark that In his case the pen was mightler thapthe tongue and that he could not make Punch and Judy In China. It would surprise a good many persons probably to hear that Punch and Judy is a Chinese institution, but there seems to be good ground for the supposition, according to a correspondent of a London paper, who says: "A few years ago I witnessed at a garden party given by the general then commanding the troops in Hongkong the exhibition of a Chinese Punch and Judy, which had been brought down from Canton. The general arrangements were precisely the same as those of an English Punch and Judy, the only difference being that instead of the dog Toby there was a wooden figure with clapping jaws, supposed to represent a dragon.

"The costumes were Chinese, and the piece varied in some respects from that which we see in England, but all the characteristic features were the same. The lesser mandarins were duly knocked over by the big mandarts, with just the same satisfactory whack as that with which Punch disposes of Judy and Jack Ketch, and all the accessories of voices, pipes and scenery correspond to those of the English performance."

It's the Same Discount.

"As to dreams," said the Chicago drummer as the subject was under discussion, "I believe in 'em and have got proofs of their veracity. It was only a week ago that I dreamed of finding a dollar, and next day I picked up 60 cents from the sidewalk."

"But that wasn't a dollar," protested a listener. "Of course not. You have to give the usual 40 per cent off in dreams as well as in business, don't you?"
