Colonel Robert A. Miller, then register Loughlin and now, of the United States Land Office at Oregon City was elected president and un-der the joint administration of these and other officers all the colleges and higher educational institutions of Oregon united in a work that is not surpassed in any other state of the Union. As a result of this great Chautauqua movement lecturers have been brought to Oregon City from East and West, classes have been organized of hundreds of teachers who now come here annually for their summer outing at Gladetone Park. So that before Mrs. Dye ever wrote a line of "McLoughl,n and Old Oregon," or "The Conquest" she was one of the best known women in Oregon especially in educational circles.

White engaged in historical research Mrs. Dye has given lectures and ad-dresses in Portland and San Francisco, spoken before the State Teachers' Association and before many schools and societies. Before her first book appeared if was predicted in the columns of the Oregonian that she would become the "Walter Scott of Oregon." On one occasion fifty of our leading people here chartered a car and went down in a body to hear Mrs. Dye lecture on McLoughlin before the Portland Historical Society But the recent pressure of work on "The Conquest," and weariness since resultfoundest, and wearness since resulting has for the past year interferred with her appearance on the public platform. I like to lecture," says Mrs. Dye, "but I find that it interferes with my leisure for literary work and I do not like to leave home."

Contrary to the accepted idea of authors. Mrs. Dye is eminently domestic soperintending her own house and per

In the interval between writing "Mc-Loughlin and Old Oregon," and "The Conquest," Mrs. Dve prepared a little book of "Stories of Oregon," for case in the public schools. This is published by the Whitaker & Ray Company, of San Francisco, and will soon appear in a new edition.

The American Government only desired to purchase the city of New Orleans. Napoleon knew the value of it, but rather than allow it to fall into the hands of England at a probable cost of much treasure and bloodshed, to determined to cede the entire country to his friends, and when Livingston called to propose the purchase of the city he was asked what he would pay for the whole of Louisiana.
