The fact that a resident of Albany is a first cousin of Judge Alton B. Parker, democratic nominee for President, has just become public. He is W. P. Reed, who resides at 925 Ellsworth street, corner of West Tenth in this city. As may be easily guessed, the initial P. in his name stands for the family name, Parker. Mr. Reed's mother and the Democratic candidate's father were brother and sister. The silence, which is such a characteristic feature of Judge Parker seems to be a characteristic of the entire Parker family. For Mr. Reed is very reticent about the matter of his relation to Judge Parker and not disposed to talk about it at all. That the fact has leaked out at all has greatly annoyed him. Mr. Reed is now 60 years old and was born in Courtland, New York, near Judge Parker's present home. His parents left New York when he was a boy and he has been a resident of various states in the middle west since that time. He has resided in Albany the past two years, coming to this city from California. Mr. Reed is a printer by trade, but is now employed in the Albany nurseries. The only time Mr. Reed has heard directly from his cousin recently was when he received a personal letter from him a short time ago in response to a letter congratulating him upon his nomination.

The new football rules are out, and changes still further decrease the mass formations and the consequent roughness of the game. The entire field is a checkerboard this year, instead of only that part of it between the 25-yard lines as last year. There can never be less than six men in the rush line and if only six are there, then one of the men who plays behind the line must be outside the man occupying the position on the end of the line of scrimmage. The quarterback may run with the ball in any part of the field, and at any time, provided the above condition is complied with and so long as he runs at least five yards outside of the spot where the ball was put in play. The only other change of moment is that a field goal from a place or drop kick only counts four points instead of five as heretofore.

STATE NEWS

A flock of 600 young turkeys is being herded on the Mottinger ranch, in Klickitat county, Washington, just across the Columbia river from Switzer's island, says the East Oregonian. Never before in the Inland Empire has the raising of turkeys been gone into so extensively by any one person. The birds are all in excellent condition and will be marketed about Thanksgiving time.

The credit for having made the first shipment of Oregon hops, of the crop of 1901, as was the case last year also, is due to the firm of Benl, Schwarz & Sons, of New York, through their local agent, Jos. Harris, of Salem. Mr. Harris received and shipped the Smoked lot of thirty-two bales from Eugene, last Thursday, the price paid being 25 cents per pound. The hops were of the early Puggles variety and were probably the first lot to have been placed on the market. This is considered a very good price for an opening, and especially for this variety of hops, which are not so much sought after as the English Cluster and other later varieties.—Salem Statesman.

Preparations are now being made by the Granges of Oregon and Washington for the coming of the National Grange in November next. It is settled beyond all question that this body will meet in Portland at that time. State Master, E. J. Leedy, has forwarded the $2000 guarantee fund to the National secretary, as required before it could be definitely settled that the National Grange would come to Portland. There remains much to be done in the way of preparation, and the general committee has been quietly at work, but expects to open more active work during September and October. The various Granges of the state are now endeavoring to organize a class of 2999, upon the members of which the Seventh Degree will be conferred by the officers of the National Grange.

T. G. Todd has finished threshing on his farm and finds that this is not such a bad crop year after all even if it is the driest year he remembers since he settled here a generation ago. His wheat averaged about twenty bushels to the acre, and he had some oats that yielded 70 bushels per acre. As the quality is of the very best, that makes up for any shortage of yield. Spring grain did not do so well, but he had little of it. People talk about "good luck" but it is noticed that people who have good luck generally are the people who know how to do things.—Forest Grove Times.

J. M. Garrison thinks his hens must be very religious. He had been getting a goodly number of eggs each day until about a week ago when they suddenly shut off. He couldn't understand it but careful search about the usual laying places revealed scarcely an egg. It remained a mystery until Tuesday when the wife of one of the mistresses at the tent meeting came over to his home and said somebody's hens had been coming there for about a week and making nests in the straw in the big tent. It was not used much during the day and the hens seemed to find it a good place for their nests. She had saved the eggs and offered to return them but was told to keep them. Garrison thought his hens wanted to contribute to the good cause and he wouldn't interfere with them.—Forest Grove Times.

Carefully compiled estimates made from data secured by a large number of experienced correspondents in the field show the wheat crop of Oregon, Washington and Idaho to be approximately 45,000,000 bushels, an increase of more than 10,000,000 bushels over last year and but 1,500,000 bushels less than the record year of 1901. The average sown to wheat was much greater than in 1901, but a poor crop in the Willamette Valley, the Grand Ronde and the Big Bend, materially reduced the average. In the Big Bend alone, the crop was 4,000,000 bushels less than in 1901, and the Grand Ronde is about 1,000,000 bushels less than in the big year. Had these two districts alone shown the same yield per acre that was reached in 1901, the crop would have been far in excess of 50,000,000 bushels. As a matter of fact early indications pointed to a 50,000,000-bushel crop, but frost and dry weather combined to cut it down in many localities which heretofore have been reasonably immune from serious damage.

Matt George, aged 55, night watchman at the Beach hop yard, across the Willamette from Corvallis, took his shotgun into the hophouse with him when he went on duty last Thursday evening, and leaned the weapon against the wall as he started across the floor. The gun fell and was discharged, the contents of the charge entering his left foot. The member was amputated at the ankle.

Mrs. J. F. Richardson, of Portland, hired a Portland man to peel casaca bark for her on her timber claim in the Alsea Valley, Benton county. She is looking for the peeler, whom she alleges, peeled the bark, sold it and disappeared. She has been in the Alsea Valley, where she ascertained that a sale of bark had been made to the merchants there several days ago. The value of the bark was between $500 and $700.

Cocooner Wilkin's usual amblivity was sorely tried the other day, says the Corvallis Times. He was in fact mighty mad. A few words fell from his lips that are not permitted by the good old orthodox requirements. Late at night his telephone rang. It summoned the coroner from a comfortable bed and assured him that there had been a tragedy in a certain saloon, and that there was a dead man there, awaiting an inquest. The coroner didn't wait for morning. He dressed at once and hurried to the scene. When he got there, he found the subject sure enough dead, but only dead—drunk.

E. C. and T. W. Lawmill took a trip to the Sisters country last Sunday and bought a train from C. L. Gist, with which they expect to start this week on an exploring tour through Harney county. They brought from one germ on the Gist ranch which contained 236 stalks, each stalk bearing a well filled head. This field of oats was not regularly irrigated, but had the benefit of water which irrigated a garden. Mr. Gist says he expects this field to yield 50 to 60 bushels to the acre. This stool of oats was not picked as the largest but in the field there were many other bunches of oats seemingly as large as this one.—Bend Bulletin.

While trying to capture Chas. W. Walton, a highwayman, who made an attempt to hold up a street car, Police officer Ole Nelson was shot twice by the bandit, in Portland last Thursday night. Walton was overpowered and captured by the motorman and conductor after being beaten into insensibility. He proved to be only 19 years of age and a brother of Grace Haney, once a prominent and successful society girl of Portland, who was arrested for highway robbery in that city and in Seattle, while still in school. Pullerhan Nelson is recovering.
