Deserves Your Patronage.

The growth of a community and the success of its local institutions depends entirely on the loyalty of its people. It is well enough to preach "patronize home industry" but except the service given at a home institution equals that of out-of-town enterprises, this argument carries no weight and is entirely disregarded, as it should be.

Whistling For Wind.

No sooner had we rounded the cape than the wind dropped and we nearly came to a standstill. Our "kammell", i. e. captain and steersman—did the best he could do for us, but in vain. We were doomed to drift about some hours without much progress.

Shouted as Loud as I.

There was much rudeness in Li Hung Chang's manner, but if Li was answered back in his own coin he melted into graciousness. Once a junior member of a British consulate was sent to interview the viceroy on some matter. In the vast audience hall he found as one to receive him, so he took a chair near the door. Eventually Li and his following appeared at the other end of the hall on some lofty seats, and the viceroy started shouting to him in the difficult Anhui accent. To the stupefying of every one present, contrary to all principles of Chinese etiquette, the young Englishman shouted back his answer in the same loud, rough voice as far as he could imitate it in which Li had spoken to him. Every one in the suit was stricken with horror. Even Li started and spoke lower. Gradually the conversation assumed a convenient tone, and after a bit Li, with a humorous smile, beckoned the young man to come up higher and sit down beside him. They soon became excellent friends.—London Mail and Women.

A Defense of Slang.

So far from being an evidence of national levity and lack of seriousness, slang is the language of sincerity. It is the result of an instinctive effort to get as far away as possible from everything like pretentiousness. It is the language of bathos. It is the language of the whole people, because it is expressive of the national sense of humor that is never so keen as when it contemplates with a joy likewise unutterable the spectacle presented to a fake exposé. It is blunt, it is crude, it is brutal sometimes, but it is always sincere. It directs against the citadels of evil the mighty engines of laughter. It does for our nascent abuse what the mordant satire of Martial and Juvenal failed to do for decadent Rome.—Professor Herman Spencer's Booklovers' Magazine.

His Study of the Heart.

In his memoirs Adolf Kussmaul relates a curious story of a Heidelberg banker. This banker was known for his haughty, forbidding manners; consequently Dr. Nuhn, the professor of anatomy, was much surprised one day when the banker came and sat with him in a railway car and, after a pleasant chat, asked him all sorts of questions, especially about the anatomy of the heart. The next day he even called by permission in the medical department and watched the professor dissecting one of those organs. Then he drove home, and a few hours later became known that he had committed suicide by skillfully plunging a dagger into his heart.

A Family Picture.

Copley, the English painter, was commissioned by a wealthy Bristol merchant to paint the latter and his wife. "But I want to have my deceased wife introduced as well," he said. The order was filled, but soon after the picture, half in mourning, half in wedding splendor, hurried into the studio. "I have had the misfortune to lose my second wife," declared he. "I wish to have included in the portrait the lady who now takes the head of my table. The three wives are in the picture.

Apprehension.

"Why, yes; my boy is quite bold-gonous—in fact, he is so interested in machinery that I'm afraid he may become an inventor." "A fraud?" "Yes; because, you know, if he should invent anything of value the chances are a hundred to one that somebody else will make all the money out of it."—Judge.

A Historic Spot.

Husband—Are you aware my dear that on this grassy spot began a war that lasted ten years? Wife—Why, John, it was here that you proposed to me. Husband—Exactly; just ten years ago.
