WERE BURNED TO DEATH.

Details of Fatal Accident to Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Andrews.

Detailed information of the fatal burning of Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Andrews, formerly residents of this city, at their home near Seattle about a week ago, did not reach Oregon City until Wednesday when newspaper clippings were sent friends in this city. A dispatch from Bellingham, Washington, to a Seattle paper gave the following facts concerning the sad affair:

"The cause of the fire which blotted out two lives and came near taking several others, will probably never be known. It had been supposed that the blaze started from a lamp that heated an incubator in one of the lower rooms. It was thought that the lamp exploded, but there is nothing to indicate that this is true. Incendiarism has not been suggested.

"The fire was discovered by Joseph Cousins, the 21-year old son of John Cousins, and Ed. Bowers who were working on the place and staying at the house. It was about 10:30 p.m. when everyone had gone to bed, when the flames were discovered, but by that time they had spread so far that it was impossible to say where the fire started from.

"The men acted quickly. Their first thought being of the helpless children, they went to the sleeping rooms of the three, two girls, aged 15 and 7 and a boy aged 11, and bundled them out through a window just in time to save them from being cut off from the flames.

"The parents were sleeping in a down stairs room in the northwest corner of the house, farther from the blaze than any of the others. To avoid the flames Joseph Cousins rushed through the dining room to gain the sleeping apartments of Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, but his way was cut off by the flames and he was compelled to go around by the window of their room. By that time the unfortunate couple were entirely shut off by the flames, and the extreme heat made it impossible to aid them, and the would be rescuers after several vain attempts, were compelled to listen to the agonized groans of the sufferers, till at last the sounds were hushed in the stillness of death.

"Both Cousins and Bowers were painfully burned in their attempts to effect the rescue of the unfortunate couple. The older daughter made several frantic attempts to enter the burning house to aid her parents, and only strong arms restrained her from rushing through the flames to what would have been certain death in a desperate effort to save those dear to her.

"After the fire had burned down—it was impossible to extinguish it on account of the headway it had gained before discovery, and the lack of fire-fighting facilities—a sorry spectacle was presented. Nothing remained of the house but a heap of ashes and ruins and the remains of the man and wife were unrecognizable, save for a distinction in the filling of the teeth.

"The rescued ones say that but for the prompt work of the young men, Cousins and Bowers, the number of victims would likely have been five instead of two.

"A coroner's inquest was held Friday afternoon at Lopes' * * * The jury returned a verdict of accidental death.

"Forrest Andrews was forty-five years old while his wife was one year younger. Mr. Andrews took a three years' lease on the Cousins place last June. Prior to that time he had lived for three years at Green Lake, Seattle. Little further is known of them here, save that they were good people, devoutly religious and highly respected."
