Communication Was Uncalled For.

Last week's Enterprise contained a communicated article by Mr. Horn concerning the Horn lawsuit which should not have been published as too much venom was displayed by Mr. Horn in his statement of the case. The Enterprise has no knowledge of the merits of the controversy but can see no good in airing either side in the newspapers.

The article published last week charges Mr. Hedges with various crimes and misdemeanors when, as far as the Enterprise knows and believes, he represented his client to the best of his ability as an attorney should. Because Mr. Hedges represented Mrs. Horn and was opposed to Mr. Horn's views in the controversy and endeavored to get for his client such a settlement as, in his opinion, she was entitled to, Mr. Hedges is charged with all of the crimes in the calendar.

The Enterprise does not wish to be understood as sanctioning this statement of Mr. Horn's, but on the other hand, believes Mr. Hedges did only what was proper and was the duty of any honorable attorney to do under the circumstances. An attorney must represent the interests of his client and to do this many good people believe he is not doing right because his measures do not suit them and sensational charges are frequently made. These usually contain little or no truth and nothing is gained by going into the newspapers with them.
