WAS TIRED OF LIVING.

Disappointed in Love and Work, Richard Watkins Ends His Life. Richard Watkins died Wednesday afternoon from the effects of an overdose of opium and morphine that was taken early in the morning presumably with suicidal intent.

Watkins was found lying in an unconscious condition in the morning on the banks of the Clackamas river near this city. Life was nearly extinct but the man was brought to this city where three physicians worked over him until 5 o'clock in the afternoon when death ensued. The deceased was aged about 35 years and had resided at Oregon City for a number of years, being employed as a laborer. He was unmarried and is survived by two sisters, who reside in Portland. A few weeks ago the girl with whom Watkins was infatuated and whom he was engaged to wed, terminated the engagement and is said to have only very recently been married to a comparalive stranger. This disappointment and the dismissal of the young man from the work at which he was last employed Saturday are considered responsible for the deed. Watkins was last seen alive about 11 o'clock Tuesday night when he was heard to inquire with what possible success he would meet should he start a shooting gallery. Being assured that the prospects were discouraging, Watkins remarked that he "was about tired of hard work, anyway," and then departed up the street.
