Tragedy of the Elbow Sleeve. At Logansport, Ind., Miss Mabel Blacke wanted to wear elbow sleeves on her summer gowns, but there were obstacles. She told her fiance, C. W. Rhinehart about them.

"Sure, that's easy," said he. Shave 'em off; I'll loan you my razor."

Rhinehart secured the razor and lather to enable Miss Blacke to laugh at the shortage in elbow gloves. Then he sat down to show her how to shave her arms.

"Now, let me try," said Miss Blacke, and took the razor. She was doing nicely until she slipped and seized Rhinehart by the knee to steady herself. The razor cut a 4-inch gash in Rhinehart's knee, clear to the bone.

Miss Blacke ran through the streets, arms bare and covered with lather, and found a surgeon, who took nine stitches in the wound.

Know Your Own Mind. The great majority of people need bracing up all the time. They want to be reassured. They do not know their own minds. They are not sure of themselves. The leader, the man who can rule others, must be master of this art. Encouragement is to many men what battery is to some women.—Success.

How He Avoided It. "Have you ever been hissed off the stage?" asked the girl who was thrilled at having met a real actor.

"Oh, no," he replied. "When I'm off the stage I always try to be among friends as much as possible."—Chicago Record-Herald.

CHEAPER FARES ARE AT LAST SECURED

Residents of Vancouver, Wash., Get Reduced Rates to Portland.

Vancouver, Wash., Aug. 31.—After a fight of several years, Vancouver has finally succeeded in getting a substantial reduction in the fare between Portland and the city across the Columbia. The east side rejoices in the change, for with the reduction in fares comes a reduction in ferry charges, which, enabling the Vancouver mills to compete with Portland concerns, may result in a cheapening of the price of lumber.

Hereafter the fare one way will be 20 cents, with 35 for the round trip. The commissioners' court at Vancouver held the club that finally brought about the reduction. The license to operate the ferry across the Columbia was about to expire and the court refused to renew the license unless a substantial reduction was made in ferriage across the river and car fare to Portland.

The court demands a 15-cent rate with 25 cents for the round trip, but this the company refused to grant. Finally a compromise was made on the above-named rates. The court, however limited the time the license is to run to January 1, 1907, announcing that a further reduction would be expected at that time. Residents of Vancouver, assisted by Portland merchants, have waged a campaign for several years past to secure this reduction. The business men of Vancouver have always strenuously fought it, claiming that it would seriously interfere with their business by encouraging shoppers from that city to do their shopping in Portland. The merchants of Portland evidently had the same idea, as they have given every encouragement to the reduction of fares.

A VAST STONY WRECK.

The North Cape, in Norway, is Almost the World's End.

The North cape, Norway, is not quite the most northerly land in Europe, but it is far enough north, a dismal black point jutting out into the sea nearly a thousand feet high. Leading to the top is a rough path not difficult to ascend unless it be wet and slippery. From the top to the edge of the cliff is a half mile or more of hard walking over stones or through mire.

At last we come to the edge of the cliff. The sun, though it is nearly 12 o'clock, has almost reached the lowest edge of his daily path, but is still far above the shimmering sea. You stand on that lonely point feeling, except for the presence of those around you, that you are quite out of the world in which you have hitherto spent your life. You stand without on a rock pelted by every storm of wind and snow. Attacked by the fiery summer sun and pitiless winter frost, no wonder that neither tree nor shrub nor scarce a flower can exist. Among the most solemn places on the globe it must be reckoned the world's end, a vast stony wreck projecting above the wide waste of waters.—Albert L. Hollis in Booklovers Magazine.

The Teakkerchief. In some parts of the Tyrol a beautiful though curious custom prevails. When a girl is going to be married and just before she leaves for the church her mother gives her a handkerchief, which is called a teakkerchief. It is made of newly spun and unused linen, and with it the girl dries the natural tears she sheds on leaving home. The teakkerchief is never used after the marriage day, but is folded up and placed in the linen closet, where it remains till its owner's death, when it is taken from its place and spread over her dead face.
