FAVORABLE FALL WEATHER

Summary by the Weather Bureau for the Week Ending Oct. 1.

This week, on the whole, was very favorable. There were several good showers in the northwest counties, and although the weather at times was cloudy and threatening in the southern and eastern counties, no rain of consequence occurred in those counties. The mornings were unusually cool and frosts frequently occurred in exposed places; in some of the higher valleys the frosts were heavy, but in other sections they were light and harmless. The afternoon temperatures were generally above normal, without the heat being excessive. The winds along the coast were high at times, but in the interior they were generally light.
