

WORK ON BRIDGE
TOWERS COMPLETED

The work on the suspension bridge towers is complete except for putting on hoods or covers over the caps to protect them from the weather. Contractor Olds is taking down the irons or jacks used in lifting the cables.

"I'm mighty glad it's through," said Commissioner John Lowellen, who has had charge of the repairs. "It has been a long and tedious job. Much of the old wood on top of the piers had to be chipped out with a chisel. A man had to get down on his hands and knees to reach it and he could work all day and you could hardly see that he had accomplished much. Now those west side piers are better and stronger than when new."

The cables over the west piers or towers were jacked up high enough to take out all the unbound timbers and to substitute steel beams for cross pieces. Placed on them are heavy saddles on which rest the cables. The great, heavy uprights placed outside the towers to support the work platforms have been allowed to remain and add strength to the towers, in fact make them stronger than new.

The iron for finishing the splicing of the cable ends at the east side anchorages came, Monday, and work will be rushed from now on, so that the concrete tunnels may be put in and the great, unsightly and dangerous holes filled up.
