Steer Lands on Him.

A Hood River butcher had a fierce experience with a vicious steer Thursday while attempting to sacrifice him for the butcher's block. The whimsical brute had been run into the killing stall, and when the butcher went to shut the door, he gave a vicious kick and the door landed on the butcher's pate with a tremendous bang. He recovered sufficient to try to shut the door again—and this time peeled three slices of cattle from off his face as large as Mexican dollars. However, he got the best of him in the long run and he is now on tap at the blocks. The way the butcher carves steaks off of his hind quarters is with apparent vengeance.

MARRIAGE BY CONQUEST.

A Real Bold, Bad Man, Who Makes Off With the Heroine.

"I am for marriage by conquest," declared a popular young woman, "and when I write the great American novel, I mean to have for my hero a real bold, bad man, who makes off with the heroine in true bandit fashion. It isn't fashionable to be bold in wooing nowadays; it's a battle of the wits. The hero starts with an epigram, a square chin and becoming leanness. The heroine is a Christy girl, who smokes cigarettes and always gets invited to rich people's houses. The hero makes an epigram, and then the heroine makes another one, and then follows a scintillation of wit and cynicism that makes the reader's head ache."

The heroine flirts scandalously with a rich Wall street broker or soap manufacturer; the hero gets leaner and his jaw gets squarer and his clothes fit better with each succeeding chapter, and the wit runs on in a never ceasing ebullition of fireworks until in the last chapter, worn out by much talk, he hoarsely says, "Marie, let's get married and talk it over later," and she indulges in a boyish laugh and lights another cigarette, says something about coming an awful cropper, and asks where the ring is.

"Take the historical account of the wooing of William the Conqueror. He was in love with Matilda, and after some years' delay, according to the chronicle of Ingerbe, during which he was playing the part of the patient, gentle lover, he changed his tactics suddenly, and waylaid Matilda in the streets of Bruges, as she was returning from mass. Seizing her, with nary an epigram nor an apology, he rolled her in the dirt, spoiled her rich array, and, not content with these chivalric tokens of affection, struck her repeatedly, and then bashfully rode off at full speed. And the next time they met the fair one accepted him joyfully as her lord and master. Surely, here is a romance with plenty of force and action, and everybody knows that they married and lived happily forever after."

A Whirlwind Ship.

"Typhoonoid," a word derived from a Greek term meaning whirlwind, has been applied to a new type of boat invented by a French engineer, who seeks to do away with the present day screw propeller. The new screw is placed at the bow of the boat instead of at the stern, and it is believed that by its centrifugal displacement and the central void of the present type are converted into benefits, and the limit to the advantageous increase in velocity of rotation of the propeller is removed. The apparatus is designed to work by suction in the manner of a waterspout. The inventor figures that his boat, with a thirty-two and a half inch screw, will go through the water at a rate of more than sixty-two miles an hour.
