GAPES IN CHICKS.

A Disease Which Usually Carries Off Many of the Youngsters.

Gapes is one of the most serious causes of loss among chicks. It is caused by small worms that accumulate in the windplpe until the chicks No. 2: Ordered that J. C. If, however, the disease attacks small chicks, they usually succumb to it or become stunted.

There are several ways of treating gapes, but in all cases the first thing to do is to separate the unaffected ones ground, as the disease spreads rapidly If this precaution is not taken. The common earth worm is said to be a means of spreading the disease, as it is very frequently found to be a host for gape worms. If there is danger of gapes, use solid floors in all the coops and keep the chicks confined when there are namy earth worms on the

"Bring on the hot rolls, Violet," said Mrs. Brent in her sharp, decisive tones. The tall, angular girl thus admonshed returned to the kitchen-and then the deluge of merriment!

Young Graham, the superintendent of the beet sugar factory, bit his lip, then choked over an infinitesimal scrap of breakfast food. Professor Hinds of the high school faculty cleared his throat, then, with fork and knife upraised in an attitude much decried in the modern books on etiquette, stared blankly after the retreating figure. Bessie Layton, the stenographer at the Sampson implement offices, she of the fluffy pompadour and retrousse nose, giggled, then hastily swallowed a spoonful of coffee which promptly went down her "Sunday throat," and this on Thursday morning! And simultaneously a gale of laughter swept around the circle of boarders at Mrs. Brent's select and "homelike" establishment.

To the accompaniment of this laughter Violet passed the hot rolls from boarder to boarder, little dreaming that she was responsible for the untoward merriment. Not that laughter and merriment were uncommon at Mrs. Brent's. The cheerful atmosphere of her boarding house as much as her own good cookery kept the same circle of guests there year after year. Only Professor Hinds, the new principal of the high school, and pretty Grace Saunders were newcomers this season. And Violet-yes, Violet was the new waitress. Violet!

As she thrust the delicious rolls under Fred Graham's shaking shoulders he remembered, coughed and exclaimed:

"That was the best story you ever told, Mrs. Brent."

Grace Saunders shot him a grateful glance, but Professor Hinds looked up blankly as if trying to remember the story that had never been told. Then, as Violet again disappeared through the kitchen door, he murmured:

"Most incongruous. Never saw any thing further removed from a shrinking, delicate violet in my life-six ture and a brilliant mind." feet, if she's an inch. Funny how parents do select such inappropriate names for their children! Violet! Ought to days." have called her Sunflower!"

"But, professor, you must bear in mind that the name was bestowed when the girl measured perhaps twelve inches. Bables measure about a foot, don't they?" And young Graham gazed inquiringly at his fellow boarders. "Probably was one of those dainty, fragile sort of babies that shoot up like bean poles later on. Did that myself, my mother tells me."

Half an hour later Grace Saunders returned to the dining room intending to ask Mrs. Brent some questions regarding the best stores in the town. She found Violet darting about the table clearing away crumbs, setting back chairs, etc., with a worried look on her face. Mrs. Brent came in from the kitchen.

"There, Violet, don't you try to straighten up the whole place. You'll rity. be late to school. It's five blocks to the business college, you know, and you've got your dress to change yet."

"Oh, are you going to the business college?" inquired Grace. The tall, or. slender girl stopped untying her apron at the cordial note in the boarder's voice. "I am so glad, because I am going there too. Today is my first, and It will be so nice to see a familiar face.

Then as suddenly as it had awakened the expression of delighted anticipation died in Violet's face. She remembered. She was the waitress at Mrs. Brent's, waitress for her board and room, and Miss Grace Saunders was the daughter of a millionaire; Brent was famous: ranch owner and cattle raiser in the southern part of the state. Mrs. Brent and the rest of the "help" in the kitchen had sald it was most remarkable that a girl with such a father should soften every eye that looked upon not be studying in an eastern college the happy professor and the happler instead of an unknown business col- girl. lege in an obscure western city.

But Grace Saunders was not the sort of girl to be snubbed. When school closed that afternoon Violet Andrews found that Grace could keep pace with her and would not accept the excuse that there was work awaiting the pupil waitress in the Brent home

"Come into my room tonight and we will go over those dreadful curlycues together," Grace urged as she turned into the front door at the Brent house, while Violet wheeled to the walk leading to the kitchen. Something told her that a shadow had come into that girl's life since morning, that here was a chance where she herself might be helpful, and Grace Saunders belonged in the class of girls who simply must be of cheer and service to their fellow creatures.

The curiycues were not gone over. however, for within two minutes after Violet had entered Miss Saunders' room they were talking of more personal matters.

"I know now why the men all laughed at the table this morning. It was me. They laughed at the business college too! What is wrong with me?"

Grace glanced up at the angular yet passionate, quivering figure. A high pompadour crowned a long, narrow face, and enormous black bows stood out on either side of her long, thin, throat like bat wings. Her frock was absolutely tight fitting, accentuating every angular line. "Sit down, my dear, and let's talk, said Grace gently. "It isn't fair," sobbed Violet, flinging berself into the proffered chair. "Here you are with money, beauty and everything. And I've slaved and scrubbed and done washing to earn money enough to pay for my course. But even If I do learn stenography, who will hire me? What do they want with me when they can get girls like you and Miss Layton? There's something wrong with me. What is it?"

Grace laid a friendly hand on the heaving shoulders. "I think it is your name and your

Violet sat up very straight. "My what?"

"Your name and your hair. You see, one always thinks of a violet as some thing small and shrinking and delicate, and you-well, you are six feet tall with that pompadour. You cannot change your name, but you can change your hair."

The weeks that followed were like fairyland trips to Violet, whose mother had read herself into mental and phys. ical inertia on a diet of novels, while her father had tried to wrest gold from the sphinxlike mountains. She learned that Grace Saunders was merely study. ing bookkeeping and stenography in order to help her father, whom she adored, and that she had time between studies to do the most wonderful sewing Violet had ever seen. But first she taught Violet how to dress her hair, low and soft in puffs above her ears and a low knot at the nape of her neck; then how to do Delsarte exercises to acquire ease and to feed certain angles with massage cream.

The change was gradual, but one day when Violet waited on the table in a frock made with deep ruffles that broke her height and soft frills at throat and wrist young Graham looked puzzled.

'Seems like violets do bloom some times rather late in life," he remarked as he took the entire circle of boarders into his confidence. "But I would like to know how she became shorter."

"Some girls are born with feminin Ity," remarked Grace Saunders gently, "like Miss Layton, for instance." Whereat the little stenographer dimpled delightfully and young Graham beamed approval. "And some girls have to acquire it, like Violet. Just as soon as she dropped exaggerated high heels, lowered her pompadour and wore fluffy frocks instead of straight lines she became feminine and attractive. Such is the psychological influence of frocks. But under it all she had always a most charming na

"Yes, and she makes such good fudge. I never tasted better in my college

It was Professor Hinds who spoke, and in the sudden silence every one stared at him. Who would have thought the man behind the glasses cared for fudge? And then somehow it dawned upon the circle of boarders that the professor was looking very young and had-yes-he had some wild violets, the first of the warm early spring, in his buttonhole. He took off his glasses and glanced around with amusement

"Why not? I always was partial to violets.

Mrs. Brent slipped her hand under the tablecloth and found Grace Saunders' palpitating fluger tips.

"You knew all the time," she whispered. "Rather! It was my idea, but the professor took to it with amazing alac-And then pretty Miss Layton sprang

And then, with the memory of that first day and the wave of amusement that had gradually changed to respect and admiration for the girl and her pluck and her adaptability, the boarders of Mrs. Brent's select and homelike establishment rose and solemnly drank a toast in the coffee for which Mrs.

"To Violet!" cried young Graham. And this time no one laughed, but the tenderness which comes when love's wings flutter close seemed to notation and many another epoch making circumstance, owes its inception to the cloister and the cowl. The principle and idea of the balloon was first formed by Albert of Saxony, an Augustine recluse of the fourteenth century. Then the theory of construction was taken up and enlarged upon by Francesco Mendoza, a Portuguese Jesuit, who died in 1626. And, lastly, Bartholomeo de Guzmao, formerly a candidate for the priesthood, demonstrated the possibility of flying by airships and foretold great successes for the future. Toward the end of the eighteenth century two men named Charles and Roberts made a balloon with the longest side parallel to the horizon. Their wings were of the shape of an umbrella without the handle, to the top of which a stick was fastened parallel to the aperture of the umbrella. Five of these were disposed round the car. On finding themselves in a dead calm they tried the effect of their oars and discovered that in thirty-five minutes they had covered 6,000 feet. Balloons were first used in war as long ago as 1794, when Guyton de Morveau made two ascents and obtained important information during the battle of Fleurus. Their next appearance was during the battle of Solferino in 1859, and two years later the Federal army employed them near Washington, while their use for conveying the mail bags out of besieged Paris is well known.—Chicago News.
