A CHEAP LESSON.

New York Abandons Its Experiment In Municipa' Lighting.

About two years ago the city of New York installed at a cost of $122,-348 a combined garbage incinerator and electric light plant, the current developed being used to light the Williamsburg bridge. The intention was to effect a saving over the cost of lighting the bridge by contract, and after the plant had been in operation six months Commissioner Woodbury estimated that the saving amounted to about 40 per cent.

It was therefore somewhat of a surprise to those who were not aware of the real facts to learn that the lighting plant had been shut down. The englneers in charge frankly admit that the plant has been run at a loss, and, although they are chary about giving figures, the best information obtainable is to the effect that the loss amounted to about $25,000 a year as compared with the cost by contract. In other words, it cost the city with free fuel about twice as much to light the bridge as a private company charges, although the company has to buy its fuel.

It is fortunate for New York that it made its electric lighting experiment on a small scale, for if it had undertaken to do all its public lighting and had sustained a proportionate loss the effect on the tax rate (and indirectly on rents) would have been such as to make "he M. O. advocates move to some locality where their theory had not become a condition. As it is the lesson will be cheap at the price-if it has beeu really learned.

The logging camps in the Lower Columbia River district are making preparations to resume operations and within the coming few weeks all the larger camps will be running in full force.
