November.

Garbed like a somber nun she stands; Within her arms and in her hands The withered husks of glories fled. When burned October's sunsets red. Though sad of men November yields A wealth of joy, for through her fields Are sowed and barren, in her wake Thanksgiving comes, and we partake Of joys no other month bestows.

And while with cheer the home fire glows We can forgive her sober dress;— It can not make her bounty less To know earth's brightness is a'past; Dark days will not forever last.

When round the festive board we meet, Friends parted long with joy to greet, What matter skies of blue or gray?— Love can transform the darkest day. Then greet this stranger with a smile, She'll only stay a little while; Be joyful, give her hearty cheer,— Thanksgiving comes but once a year.

Most Oregon City People Have a Weak Part and Too Often It's The Back.

Everyone has a weak spot. Too often it's a bad back. Twinges follow every sudden twist. Dull aching keeps up, day and night. Tells you the kidneys need help. For backache is really kidney-ache. A kidney cure is what you need. Doan's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys.

Cure backache and urinary ills. E. Warner, living in Ellyville, near Oregon City, Ore., says: "I had kidney trouble and diabetes. I suffered from backache day and night and had to get up nearly every hour of the night to pass kidney secretions. I finally procured a box of Doan's Kidney Pills at Huntley Bros' drug store and in about a week after commencing to take them I could sleep through the entire night without the usual disturbance. All pain and other annoying symptoms soon ceased and I stopped taking the remedy. I had a slight recurrence of the trouble a few weeks later, but on using Doan's Kidney Pills again obtained immediate relief."

Orchard and Garden.

Don't mulch the strawberry bed too early; wait until the ground freezes sufficiently hard to hold up a wagon. Autumn is not the best time to prune fruit trees. Wait until March or June.

Ever tried wrapping choice winter apples in paper and putting them away to see how they will keep? Try it.

We hope that you won't permit the strawberry bed to go into winter quarters filled with weeds or grass. Look after the pits in which potatoes and the like are stored. Put on more earth and close up the openings left for ventilation. In very cold weather it is a good plan to cover the pits with corn fodder.

Last call! All sorts of raspberries, blackberries or grapevines that are not entirely hardy in one's locality should be laid down and covered with earth. Perhaps this treatment would sometimes pay with a few of the so-called hardy varieties.

In mild climates November is the time to prune grapevines; but in very cold climates it is safer to delay the pruning until severe cold is practically over—say the latter part of February. Cut back new wood so as to leave only two or three buds on each cane.

In late autumn make surface ditches or cuts to catch winter's surface waters and so save the plants. A little study will show where to run them so as most surely to lead away over. If not needed longer in spring they can be closed up. They need generally be no bigger than furrows. Tile underdrains are often needed in the berry patch, also, and the two supplement each other nicely.

A Forbidden Inquiry.

The last bell rang for the passengers who were on board to bid friends goodbye to go ashore.

"Adieu, sweetheart. I shall count the hours till you return."

"Are you sure?"

"And suppose I never return?"

"I will go and weep over your grave."

"You won't have to go. I have no mind to be buried over there. I made my will yesterday and gave directions that if I die abroad my body shall be sent home to lie in the family lot at Avondale."

"Then I will weep there."

"How long?"

"For my lifetime."

He hurried ashore and stood looking from the end of the dock up at her, throwing her kisses which she threw back at him.

A month later word was mailed from abroad that she had died suddenly of heart disease while climbing a mountain in Switzerland. He remained for three days in a stupor, then was about to go abroad, where her mortal part was, when he remembered her farewell words. As soon as the cool weather set in an oblong box was received from Switzerland and buried in Avondale cemetery. He was not notified of the burial by her sister cousin, her only relative, who gave as a reason that it would be better he should not be present. But as soon as he learned of the fact he went to the cemetery and stood uncovered by her grave, tears rolling down his cheeks. He had brought some plants to see that when their flowers the next spring would hang over her grave. Some one had been there before him on a similar errand. Flowers were strewn over the mound so fresh that they must have been cut but a few hours.

He spoke of these flowers to her cousin and asked if she had placed them. She had not and seemed surprised.

He was troubled. It is singular that we should be jealous in case of the dead.

Every Sunday afternoon he went to the cemetery, and every time he found fresh flowers on the grave. They must have been placed there in the morning. The next Sunday he went at dawn and waited and waited till 10 o'clock for this rival for the dead. At that hour a young girl came and strewn flowers on the grave. A great relief came to him. He advanced and addressed his fellow mourner. She had been a friend of his former fiancée.

Every Sunday morning these two met at the grave of one for whom they had a common love. He grew to look forward to the meeting not so much as a melancholy event as a reunion with one who was filling the void in his heart, a void which, if filled at all, can be done only by a living person. But this girl of flesh and blood was the first constrained, and her constraint had grown on her. When they met her eyes would brighten; but, looking down on her friend's grave, she seemed moved by some inward emotion.

When winter came their visits were omitted by mutual consent till the spring should come. Their meetings were not as before, on Sunday mornings, but on Sunday afternoons, and were often prolonged until late in the evening. It was pleasant to sit by a warm fireplace than stand out in the cold cemetery, where the winds shrieked through the leafless branches.

He besought her to marry him. She refused. From the expression on her face his words seemed to have had the effect rather of clouds falling on a coffin than of a great comfort.

When the crocuses were springing up she proposed that they go again to the cemetery. He sighed and consented, but at the appointed time he made excuses. She said, though with evident reluctance, that she would go alone. So he went with her. On the way she was silent and melancholy. To see her one would have thought she was going to her own funeral.

He carried the flowers to the grave, while she stood at the gate of the enclosure. He had strewn them when, looking up, he saw a figure coming down the roadway. Shaking his eyes with his hand to see more distinctly, he staggered back against the iron rail. The woman over whose grave he had strewn flowers—his lost love—was coming.

She advanced with a slow step, a serious expression on her face. There was nothing ghostly about her. On the contrary, she was plainly mortal. What astonished her betrothed most was that her friend appeared in no way surprised at this return from the dead to the quick.

"This is a wrong I have done you," said the returned one, "and I regret it, but I laid the plan long ago and resolved that I would carry it out. When we parted I began a breeding over your words that you would 'weep over my grave.' Then I became possessed with a desire to learn how long you would weep for me or if you would be faithful to my memory. I gave out that I was dead and caused an empty box to be buried here. More than that, I arranged for her," pointing to his fellow mourner, "to come here to meet you. I have learned what it is better to know—that the dead have no place in the hearts of the living than can be easily heard by another."

These were the only words spoken. What else was there to say? The three left the cemetery by different routes and never met again.

How far the mortal heart reaches into immortality is one of the hidden secrets of Providence which it is dangerous to attempt to solve.

To Remove Mildew. Should the clothes be mildewed, the stains may be removed by a mixture containing equal parts of soft soap and starch, half as much common salt and the juice of one lemon. This may be spread over the spots, and the arti-
