This point was raised by Judge Hayes, and at considerable length, and finally re-sulted in Recorder Johnson releasing the defendant and dismissing the case against him.

There were about 200 people present at the trial. Close operated a saloon at Estacada during the "wet" period. and when the town went dry last June he remained in business, ostensibly selling "soft" drinks, and running pool tables. It was suspected that he was conducting a "blind pig" and report was current that the matter would be presented to the grand jury, but the recent decision of the supreme court makes it impossible for the county officers to interfere in an Estacada famly matter, as the charter of that town places the licensing and supervision of saloons in the hands of local authorities. It is believed that Close will be an rested for the third time, for the city officials are determined to stamp out the practices that they believe prevail
