A Poet's First Duty.

I know that her feelings were hurt, and it may be weeks before she forgives me, but a poet owes something to himself as well as to others. His first duty is to live through the hot summer and come out right end up in the fall. At Farmer Hope's It was different. The farmer and his wife had gone to town, leaving the son Bill at home alone. Instead of being on the hustle in the cornfield he was sitting on the fence waiting for me. He had his head in his hands and looked to be a sick young man. When I helloed him he beckoned me to follow him to the orchard. I did so, and he pointed to a noosed rope hanging from a limb and said:

"Abe, I must have some poetry or my neck goes into that noose."

"Gee, Bill, but it's roasting hot!" "Makes no difference. I've been in love with Sarah Jane Gregg for two years, and she's turned me down. If you won't write something to melt her heart, then it's goodby to the world for me.

I knew Bill for a determined young man, and I'knew his father and mother for good people, and so I doused my head in water from the kitchen pump and had the young man fan me with a burdock leaf while I wrote as ollows:

In the gloaming I sit, And the shadows they flit, And my thoughts are of Sarah Jane Gregg. There's a tear in my eye And my soul gives a sigh. And the rheumatiz comes to my leg.

But the singing it gives me away When the night it is dark And to winds 1 do hars

Then I think of the sad willer tree. Will it bend over Bill As a grave he doth fill And weep for the sad tragedee?

When departed 1 am, Like a jar of old jam. Sarah bend over my bier?

Will she sigh with regret

Will she sign with togret (I think so, you net) That she didn't any yes when I popped; That she gave me the shake, And my heart I did break, As unto cold death I was dopped?

Myrtle-Force of habit, I suppose. I've always understood she had to eem to Bill he walked to the apple drag him into the engagement.
