Farm and Garden

IDEAS ABOUT HAY.

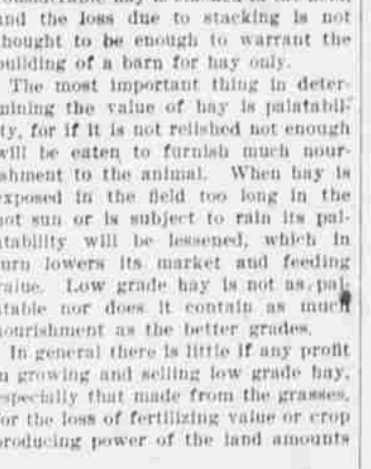

Increase in Yield and How to Improve Crops.
The average yield of hay in the United States from 1865 to 1870 was 1.28 tons per acre. This yield was exceeded but three times during the forty years from 1865 to 1905. The average yield for the third five year period, ending with 1880, was 1.29 tons; that of the seventh five year period was 1.35 tons, and that for the last five years was 1.47 tons per acre. The average yield for the last period shows an increase of 0.19 ton over that for the first period and an increase of 0.21 ton over the average yield for forty years, which is 1.26 tons per acre.
The average yield per acre in the ten leading timothy hay producing states for forty years varies little from that for the entire United States. There is a slight difference during the first twenty-five years, when the yield was above that for the United States. The yield during the last fifteen years was nearly the same for both.

The feeding value of hay is often lowered when it is stacked out in the open. Considerable hay is often entirely spoiled so that it is unfit for feeding. The amount of spoiled and damaged hay depends upon the time the stack stands and upon the method of stacking. In Virginia a six to eight ton stack of timothy hay, after it has gone through the sweat, or in three or four weeks, will have from 500 to 600 pounds of damaged hay. Most of this will be on the top and only a small portion on the sides and the bottom.
The market value of hay is frequently lowered because this spoiled hay is worked into the bales. It may happen that the spoiled hay will be no more than a couple of handfuls, which amount is really insignificant, but the inspector cannot tell how much the bale contains, so he is forced to grade it one or two grades lower. This causes quite a loss to those who sell hay. In Iowa and surrounding states considerable hay is stacked in the field, and the loss due to stacking is not thought to be enough to warrant the building of a barn for hay only.
The most important thing in determining the value of hay is palatability, for if it is not relished not enough will be eaten to furnish much nourishment to the animal. When hay is exposed in the field too long in the hot sun or is subject to rain its palatability will be lessened, which in turn lowers its market and feeding value. Lower grade hay is not as palatable nor does it contain as much nourishment as the better grades.
In general there is little if any profit in growing and selling low grade hay, especially that made from the grasses, for the loss of fertilizing value or crop producing power of the land amounts to more than the net profit after the cost of curing, baling, etc., is deducted. The price of hay land is steadily rising in the same hay section, and in order to make a fair profit on the value of the land it will be necessary for the grower to practice the best methods of culture, curing, baling and selling. Before there can be any material change in the quality of hay sent to the market it will be necessary for farmers to learn the grades of hay, for it is impossible to grow choice hay if the producer does not know what constitutes this grade.

Much of the heavy work in loading hay can be saved by using a hay loader. Take pains to stack well. Note the difference between the stacks in the illustration.
