SOCIETY

The first ladies night of Oregon City Lodge, No. 1183, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, took place Wednesday night in the Elks hall on the corner of Sixth and Main streets. The affair was especially pleasing and was attended by more than 100 Elks and their wives and sweethearts. An attractive programme was rendered and the appearance of Mrs. Nina Barlow Lawrence with her Pastime quartette was the signal for enthusiastic applause. Entertaining vocal numbers were given by Miss C. Barclay Pratt and Miss Grace Shewman. Miss Tolpolar played a piano selection and Baby Brooks sang, and a number by the Pastime quartette closed the programme. There were eight tables of bridge, and Miss Pratt, Mrs. Edward C. Baker and Mrs. T. P. Randall won the prizes. The "hooby" prize went to Fred C. Miller, who was the only Elk who had the temerity to play with the ladies. A toothsome lunch was served and the affair ended at a late hour. Its success means that other entertainments of a like character will be given at intervals of five or six weeks after the summer season.

Music lovers were delighted Friday afternoon with a programme given by Miss Abby Whitehead, under the auspices of the Berthick Club, at the beautiful home of Mrs. Ernst A. Sommer. There were 90 guests present, and the hostess was assisted by Mrs. Anna G. Hayes, Mrs. William Allison Huntley, Mrs. Joseph Eugene Hedges, Mrs. George A. Harding and Mrs. Llewellyn Adams. The house was lavishly decorated with roses. There were beautiful buds and blossoms in the halls, dining room, spacious living rooms and glass encased porches. Intermixed with vines and relieved by clinging ferns. Dainty refreshments were served. Miss Whitehead

The Sweet Briars played their second game of baseball with Wilsonville Sunday. The score was 10 to 11 in favor of the Wilsonville team. I guess we'll have to admit that Wilsonville are just a little better players than the Sweet Briars as they won the other game. Though both games were in favor of the Wilsonville, the Sweet Briars weren't far behind the first game being 10 to 12.

Annie Hodge went to Oregon City Saturday.

Will Kaiser had a barn raising last Saturday forenoon. It was well attended and the barn went up with out accident at noon. An excellent dinner was served which had been prepared before hand by Mrs. Kaiser. Lou Koellmeier is hauling lumber for his barn.

Latter Learns That Her Husband Enjoyed a Dog Fight.

PACKS SATCHEL AND QUILTS.

During Account of Scrimmage Dolby is Indifferent—Wife Departs—Remembering that Hubby Didn't Know How to Make Coffee, She Returns.

By M. QUAD. (Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.)

At the supper table Mrs. Dolby remarked that the deacon's overalls needed patching and that he had better run down to the store and get half a yard of denim. He didn't say whether he would or not, but when the meal had been finished he went. He left Mrs. Dolby clearing away the dishes and talking to the cat. He returned an hour later to find her sitting in the kitchen, with hat and shawl on and a satchel by her side. He knew that something had occurred during his absence, but he was neither put out nor vexed. He took the book entitled "Every Man His Own Lawyer" and sat down to peruse it. He had been reading for five minutes when Mrs. Dolby solemnly announced: "Samuel, the end has come!" Mr. Dolby crossed his legs and read that there was assault and battery. A person could be assaulted by calling him names, but battery consisted in laying on of hands and was the more serious of the two crimes. He had just reached this announcement when Mrs. Dolby spoke again: "Samuel Dolby, I leave this house tonight! I just wanted to tell you that your reprehensible conduct is known!"

The deacon's inner mind began to wonder what that reprehensible conduct was and his outer to grasp the fact, as stated in the book, that stealing a pig is not legally the same as stealing a hog.

"Yes, it is known to me," said Mrs. Dolby. "During your absence Mrs. Whitman called. After she told me what her husband told her I began packing up. I saw that I could not live with you another day and go to heaven when I died. I shall go to live with my sister. If you get a patch on those overalls you will have to pin it on."

During the deep, dark, dank silence that followed the clock missed two ticks and the trinkette on the stove uttered a mournful sigh. Mr. Dolby also read that throwing ashes on another man's hand was trespass, the same as if you had walked on it.

"It happened about six weeks ago," continued Mrs. Dolby as her tears came and she used a corner of the shawl on her eyes. "You had had a bolt on your leg. It was getting well, and you felt so good about it that you said you were a better man hereafter. You went downtown to get a can of tomatoes. You said they asked 12 cents a can, but you thought you could beat 'em down to 'leven. You must remember, Samuel."

Tarried to See Canines Scrap. Samuel did, but he didn't give himself away. He sat there like a man of stone and read that if a farmer put a five pound stone at the bottom of a ten pound crock of butter it was not arson, but false pretenses. He was pretending that there were ten pounds of butter there when there weren't.

"You had got the tomatoes for 'leven cents and was coming home when you saw Silas Davis' dog pitch into Ben Steadman's dog. Samuel, did you try to separate those dogs? Did you get between them and wave them away from each other? Were you filled with sorrow to see two brutes rending each other? Samuel, I must have an answer."

But she didn't get one. Yes, the deacon remembered that canine conflict. They were two big dogs, and they put up a bully scrap. He almost felt his mouth water when he harked back to that night.

"No, you didn't," sobbed Mrs. Dolby. "Some men came running to part them, and instead of assisting you cried out: 'Stand back there and let 'em chew each other! I will punch the head of the first man who interferes.' Yes, that's what you said, and Mr. Whitman was there and heard you. He said you waved your arms and your eyes looked bloodshot. Think of it, Samuel—think of it! If you were a wife could you live with such a husband as that?"

The deacon thought of it and almost smiled. Prettiest dog fight he ever saw—well matched for weight and both full of grit. He'd give 50 cents to see it over again. And the book before him said that to call a man a deadbeat because he didn't pay his debts was libel.

"And you hollered 'ick 'em' at one dog and 'ten boy' at the other, and you kept 'em fighting for fifteen minutes. And when Elder Griscom came along and reproved you you bristled right up to him and said this was a free country and if dogs wanted to fight they had the privilege. Samuel, can I live with such a man and keep my respect for him? I am weeping, as you see. I am not weeping because I am going away, but on account of your wickedness. I certainly expect to hear within three months that you've been hung for murder!"

Conscience Never Touched Him. One of the deacon's eyebrows twisted a very little bit, but as Mrs. Dolby's eyes were full of tears she didn't observe it. He wasn't a bit conscience-stricken. He read right along that the owner of a cow laid himself liable to the law if he cut her tail, no matter if she switched it sixty times a minute.

"If you had come home, Samuel—if you had come home and made excuses, but you didn't. You just strolled in as placid as if you had been out hoeing cabbage. You could have exchanged your dog pitched into the other without provocation and that you didn't interfere because you were afraid of being bit, but you just wound up the clock and said it was time to go to bed. That was deception on top of crime. How do I know that you won't smile on me and then chop me up with the ax an hour later?"

Samuel didn't know any way she could find out, and he didn't believe there was a case in point in the book before him. It did, however, state that striking a man with a pitchfork constituted a much graver crime than hitting him with a long handled shovel. Mrs. Dolby sobbed and wept. Her tears fell on her alpaca dress and on her satchel, and it was several minutes before she rose up and said:

"Well, I must be going. Little did I think when I married you, twenty-eight years ago, that tonight I'd have to leave my own house because you have turned pirate. Do you want to say goodbye to me?"

Nothing from the deacon.

Separation and Return. "Of course I shan't write to you." The deacon didn't fall off his chair. "And if you come to me on your bedded knees—"

The idea of his knees bending worked up a new emotion, and she leaned against the door and sobbed. That was fine reading the deacon had, and he was deeply interested.

"It's night, and I have got this satchel to carry, but if I get afraid or truckered out I can sleep beside some haystack."

The deacon never cracked a smile. She opened the door, and he never moved. She went, but he paid no heed. Even when the door closed he took no notice.

Mrs. Dolby went down the path and leaned on the gate and looked back at the house. No one came to the door to call her back. She put down the satchel and gave it a kick. Her tears and sobs ceased. Had the deacon faintly away? Had he blown his head off? She softly advanced to the door and held her ear to it. No sound. Then she opened it and looked in. Then she entered the kitchen. Same deacon, same attitude.

"Samuel, I was thinking that if I went tonight you'd have to get your own breakfast and you wouldn't remember how much coffee to put in!"

And she removed her shawl and hat, put another stick of wood into the stove and five minutes later was singing "The Old Oaken Bucket" and taking solid comfort.

A Knowing Kid. One afternoon there entered the shop of a Trenton butcher a small boy, who gave this unusual order: "Gimme a pound of steak—rump or round—and let it be good and tough."

Naturally the butcher was amazed. "Why tough?" he asked.

"Ef it's tender," explained the boy, "de old man will eat it all hisself, but ef it's tough us kids will get a whack at it."—Lippincott's.

Half Million For Texas Good Roads. Seventy-two miles of country roads, distributed throughout the entire county, are to be paved by Harris county, Tex., with shell and gravel within the next twelve months out of a recent road and bridge bond issue of $500,000, according to a schedule adopted by the county commissioner's court. In the list of the roads to be paved are a number of the most important highways in the county, one of which is the Webster Air Line road, running from Harrisburg to the county line, a distance of eighteen miles, where it will connect with a paved road to be constructed by Galveston county, thereby giving a complete paved roadway from Houston to Galveston via the causeway.

A Good Road "Smoker." Recently the Business Men's association of Laredo, Kan., gave a good road "smoker" which was attended by more than 200 citizens of the county. The enthusiasm developed insures a new era in the building and maintenance of good roads in this section of the short grass country. Such a meeting would have been impossible a few years ago because it was thought that the dirt roads of middle and western Kansas would never need any great amount of care. Increased population, however, has shown differently, and there are now no more enthusiastic sections of the state on the good roads proposition.

Need of Dry Roadbeds. The most important object in draining a road is to lower the level of the ground water. If this is within a few feet of the surface it will be absorbed by the material of the road by capillary attraction. The result of this would be a softening in the road immediately below the surface. When heavy traffic passes over the road in this condition it so cuts it up that the water will not flow off.

ADVICE ON TAR MACADAM ROADS

Suggestions For Constructing Highways of This Material.

MUCH DEPENDS ON LOCALITY.

Highway Engineer Should Be Consulted and Given the Data Bearing on the Problem—Topography of Country and Traffic Should Be Studied.

As many industrious members of various rural communities are anxious to receive information as to what kind of tar macadam roads to build, an expert authority on road construction and maintenance gives the following valuable advice:

The proper determination of what kind of tar macadam road to build in a given locality could only be made by a competent highway engineer in possession of all the data bearing on the problem and preferably by an examination on the ground.

Leaving for the moment the matter of cost out of the question, the selection of a suitable method of construction and of materials best adapted thereto depends upon so many factors that no choice is possible without thorough study of the surrounding conditions. This would include a knowledge of the location of the road, its grades, the topography of the country through which it runs, the climatic conditions and especially of the traffic to which it is subjected.

A construction that would give satisfactory results in one section of the country might be entirely unsuited to another section, and in the same manner materials used successfully in a warm climate might fail in one where extreme cold prevailed during a part of the year.

When, as is almost always the case, low cost is the controlling consideration, still other factors are introduced into the problem, and still more data are required for its proper solution. The question then becomes one not of building the best possible road, but of building the best possible road that can be built for the money available. While it is not a simple matter to answer the first question, yet it is complete. It is seldom that the available funds are sufficient to pay for the best possible road, and it is necessary to sacrifice in the construction to keep within the limits of the available funds. Such weighing of cost and quality and the final decision as to what is the best and most economical procedure require not only careful thought, but also a thorough familiarity with the whole subject of road building and maintenance.

There are many road binders composed principally of tar, besides the several tars themselves, that are employed in road building. Their use has been attended by both success and failure, neither being necessarily an index of the value of the material, for the selection with due regard to conditions to be met and the manipulation in the actual work affects results fully as much as any inherent qualities of the materials.

As in most work of a similar nature, the best results are to be expected when a material and method of construction are chosen which have given satisfaction in a case similar to the particular one under discussion; hence in the last analysis the most reliable information is to be gained from service tests of roads subjected to the same outside influences as that which is to be built.

Remove the Mud Tax Burden. No plan for spring work is complete which does not include dragging the roads. If this is attended to at the proper time it insures good roads for the season and removes the larger share of that awful burden, the mud tax. In this matter the towns and cities are equally interested with the farmers, and their co-operation is not generally hard to secure if the matter is handled rightly. Road dragging is one of those things that must be secured through co-operation if widespread benefits are to be enjoyed.

Prosperity Follows Good Roads. You show me any community in this or any other state where there are good roads, said a speaker at a good roads convention, and I will show you a community where there are no paint-finished buildings or tottering lean-tos, a community where there is the air of prosperity, thrift and progress.

THE COST OF DENTAL WORK

The cost of dental work is often given as an excuse for neglect; but have you ever considered the work done by your teeth and the relative cost of dentistry compared to food, clothing, etc.? The teeth are our best friends, never valued until lost. If you neglect them you cheat yourself. There is no work that costs so little in proportion to its imperative essentiality as good dental work. There is none that can compare with it in effect upon good looks and good health. A better appreciation of conditions has made the public better understand the beneficent services rendered by dentistry in the preventative and protective work that it has done.
