A man supposed to be Fred Lincoln committed suicide at Milwaukie Monday by taking a large quantity of carbolic acid. The man had only been in Milwaukie a few days. Sunday he was on the streets and in the afternoon started to Hedges' garden, northwest of the town. He crossed the bridge over Johnson creek and went through the gate leading to the gardens. It was here that he drank the deadly drug. He evidently dragged himself over the ground for nearly 200 feet from the place where he took the poison, before death came to his relief. There was nothing found on his person that would reveal his identity. The only writing was on a Christmas card on which were written the words, "Fred to Gertrude." He had no money. An Ingersoll watch, which he had purchased at a store in Portland, was found on him. He was bald headed, with a light-gray mustache and was about 50 years old. He is supposed to have come from Vancouver, Wash. At the inquest held by Justice Kelso the verdict was death by suicide. James H. Preston, of Eagle Creek. In the death of James H.
