The lecture given at the City Hall under the auspices of the Lyceum Course by Harold Morton Kramer, who well attended. He made a tremendous hit with his audience. He has wit, philosophy and a wonderful command of language. The subject of his lecture was "Here or Nowhere." The lecture is a striking, earnest and valuable message, original in thought and courageous in treatment. It contains the broad sympathy, the soul depth, the optimistic philosophy that have characterized all of Mr. Kramer's orations. The value of such a lecture to a community can not be estimated. He called at the home of Mrs. Hassing's brother and carrying the child and placing it on the floor said to the mother "take this child and take care of it," and then departed. He returned the next morning and threatened the mother and child's life, and caused a disturbance.
