TOWN QUIET AFTER BURNING OF NEGRO

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Governor John K. Tener, of Pennsylvania, who received word at New York City today that the situation at Coatesville was quiet and demanded no immediate action on his part, said: "I cannot condone lynching in any circumstances. These things happen occasionally in some of the most enlightened Northern communities, and it is a violation of the law which the authorities cannot anticipate and which with a small force at their immediate command they are powerless to prevent. I am grieved to think that such a crime could happen in Pennsylvania, in any circumstances, for any reason." COATESVILLE, Pa., Aug. 14.—The fearful work of a frenzied mob here last night, when it dragged a wounded negro from a hospital and burned him to death for the killing of Edgar Rice, a policeman, Saturday night, has aroused the greatest public indignation and everything possible will be done to bring the ringleaders to justice. That such an affair could occur in a Quaker community like that in Chester County was not believed possible. Thousands of persons poured out to the scene of the burning today. Even before dawn people began to gather. Every sort of vehicle was brought into use and prices to take people to the place quickly went up. The distance to the Newland farm, where the lynching occurred, is not far, and a steady stream of curious people kept moving out to the scene. Nothing is left of the body of Rice, the victim, in his shoes, all unburned portions of the hospital cot that formed part of his pyre having been gathered up by souvenir hunters. Among the angriest people in the community are some of those who captured Walker yesterday afternoon in a tree in the woods near here. He had two revolvers with him and when he was surrounded by the posse he threatened them. Several of the manhunters fired at him and wounded him slightly. Evidently believing he was about to be shot to death, Walker tried suicide, sending a bullet into his head. With no thought of lynching, but with the determination of having him tried quickly for the murder of Rice, the posse laid him across three shotguns and carried him to a waiting automobile, which brought him to the Coatesville hospital. When he reached the hospital, Walker confessed his crime to Chief of Police Umsted and District Attorney Gathrop. Walker said: "It had been out drinking gin and was feeling pretty good. I got out there near the Worth's mills among the bunkies and just to let on that I was a bold man and might hold 'em up, I fired three shots from my gun. Of course, they yelled, and Rice, who had heard the shots, came rushing up and grabbed me. "I asked Rice what he wanted for. "For carrying concealed deadly weapons," he said. "Then I won't go," says I, trying to pull away. He drew his club and reached for his revolver and it must have been then that I shot him." All the leaders in the crowd wore masks made of handkerchiefs tied around their faces. After piling up the rubbish they placed the cot with its shuddering victim on it, over the pile. In an instant the negro was enveloped in flames, when the fire burned the ropes that held him free and a dash for liberty. He reached a fence and was about to climb it, but was dragged back and hurled into the flames. The mob yelled with satisfaction. Shortly afterward the lynchers left the scene. How's This? The August meeting of Molalla Grange will be an important one, all members are requested to be present as something unusual in the history of No. 216 will occur at the September meeting which all interested should take an active part in. with as many as three threshing machines doing good work within sound of each other's whistles. Years ago we used to have as many as eighteen men to thresh and sometimes keep them five days with 8 or 10 spans of horses, whereas now 6 or 8 men with two or three spans of horses will do the same work in five hours. Perhaps not exactly the same either, as in those days some fields grew about enough grain to bind up the luxuriant growth of fern whereas now the cultivated fields show but little fern.
