

The Argonauts

A Tale of the Late California Gold Seekers

By JOHN L. TIBBITS

In the spring of 1840 a train of wagons... In the spring of 1840 a train of wagons... In the spring of 1840 a train of wagons...

the Missouri river except the revolver. His purpose was, having crossed the continent, to grubstake himself and his family on this money while he prospected for gold.

In the train was a man about Starkweather's age, Joel Bryant, who by his smooth way of talking gained his fellow adventurers' confidence. Men are gregarious and prefer to work—especially to take risks—in company, and when Bryant told Starkweather that he calculated to reach the gold ground with $3,000 it occurred to the latter that they might pool their funds and buy property in which gold had been located, thereby greatly increasing their chances of success.

On reaching their journey's end the Starkweather family lived in a tent while Starkweather and Bryant prospected and kept an eye open for localities where gold had been struck in paying quantities. At last they found an opportunity. Some men with out means had secured a vein that promised well and, being operators rather than developers, were ready to sell. Bryant was anxious that he and Starkweather should buy them out, but he said his money had been sent round the Horn to a San Francisco bank, and it would require some time to get it. He begged Starkweather to put up the necessary funds, and he would produce his share as soon as possible.

Fearing to lose the purchase, Starkweather bought the mine in behalf of Bryant and himself, share and share alike.

The mine looked well, but there was a hitch in the payment of Bryant's portion of the purchase money due to his partner. Bryant showed a good deal of impatience about his nonarrival and finally concluded to go to San Francisco to discover what was the trouble. Before leaving he spent some time with a shyster lawyer, though Starkweather knew nothing about this. While Bryant was away the vein in the mine began to produce gold in largely paying quantities. Bryant was absent several months, then returned with a story that struck his partner with consternation.

He had learned that the parties who had sold them the mine were not its legal owners. The real title to the property had been bought up by parties in San Francisco who had organized a company and appointed him (Bryant) their agent. He produced the papers. Starkweather showed them to a lawyer and was informed that, while they gave evidence of very sharp practice, Starkweather's interest in the property could only be substantiated (if at all) at the end of a long legal contest. The defrauded man was advised to accept his loss, for, having paid all his money for the mine, he had none to carry on a suit which would probably go against him in the end. He surrendered to Bryant, who...

TRACELESS TABLETS

By LUCY K. WYNCOOP

A newspaper item stated that at a meeting of the G.—Medical society Dr. Blanchard, who had just returned from a trip to India announced that during his stay there he had made a study of poisons. A certain rajah whom he had visited possessed the secret of a certain poison that left no trace, though it was very deadly. The rajah had given him the name of the poison, but the doctor declined to make it known.

Blanchard became the recipient through the mail of stray requests for the name of the poison. Some professed to be scientific men, some physicians, while some desired to get rid of vermin and insects. The doctor, who attributed these requests to a desire to get rid of some enemy, was astonished at the number of would be murderers. The idea occurred to him to give out the prescription with a view to discovering how many persons would use it and for what purpose. He consulted with the chief of police, who was friendly to the idea, then inserted a small advertisement as follows:

Dr. Blanchard's traceless tablets. This is a drug the name of which was given Dr. Blanchard by a rajah of India. It is beneficial in exterminating vermin, leaving no disagreeable results—no trace whatever. Address Box 18, P. O.

The number of persons who desired the traceless tablets for exterminating purposes was remarkable. The doctor could have made a fortune in a very short time by supplying the demand. He simply read the letters, then put them in a pigeon hole in his desk to be submitted to the chief of police. How many of them occasioned police investigations the doctor never knew.

There was one that interested the doctor especially and which he kept to himself. It was, or at least purported to be, from a young girl who was afflicted with a long and painful illness, who desired to die. But she shrank from giving her parents the shock that would attend her suicide. She had read of Dr. Blanchard's announcement to the medical society and inferred that the traceless tablets were the poison there referred to. She might use them and her dear father and mother would suppose she had died a natural death.

Among the number of applications for his tablets this was the only one the doctor credited with the truth. There was something so pathetic and frank in it that he at once set down the reason given as genuine. At any rate, he determined to call upon the writer for a personal interview.

He found Miss Ethel Ames a young lady of twenty. There was in her pale face a very spiritual expression. Her eyes were really windows to a pure soul, and it was plain that if blessed with health she would have been comely. The doctor, not caring at once to appear in his true light, told her that he had come to see her about one of his tablets, but owing to the great risk incurred in such a trade his price was $100. He hoped that by putting the price so high to put her off, at least till he could diagnose her case. But he failed. She asked him to hand her a check book in a drawer near him that she might close the trade.

Blanchard, unwilling to risk disabusing her mind as to his intentions, took the check, put it in his portmanteau and, taking a tablet made of sugar and flour from his pocket, laid it on a table beside him. Then he asked the girl to give him her symptoms. This she did, and after a great many questions and answers he made up his mind that hers was one of those cases where mind dominates matter to the disadvantage of the latter. In other words, she was unconsciously producing upon herself an imaginary disease.

There is no physical ailment that is so rarely treated successfully by physicians and so often put to flight by the various methods that are dependent upon faith alone as this. Dr. Blanchard saw an opportunity for an experiment. When he had gained all the knowledge of the girl's condition he desired he said:

"The rajah from whom I received the name of this drug told me that one of his household who was ill and whose symptoms as he described them to me were exactly the same as yours was so much troubled without being of any use, even to herself, that he directed she be poisoned. She was given a tablet such as I furnish you and went to sleep. She awoke, to the surprise of every one, and was completely cured of her disease. All other persons who had taken it slept the sleep of death. I would advise you to take the tablet tonight, and you will either wake up in heaven or a healthy woman. I prophesy the latter to be a certainty."

"Why are you so sure of that, doctor?" asked the patient eagerly. "Because my friend the rajah had it tried on 164 cases similar to yours, and every one was cured."

The doctor left his patient with the understanding that if she took the tablet she would be well, but to guard it from others, for they would surely die under its influence. He told her that he would call on the morrow and as surely expected to find her alive and well as that the sun would rise and set.

He did not sleep a wink that night, but the girl did, and in the morning her mind, which had been holding her body as in a vise, relaxed its grip, and she was well.

England's Forests. The forests for which England was at one time famous have vanished or exist only in the attenuated form of carefully preserved woods and parks, from which they can obtain but a fraction of the supplies they need.

The Puzzle of Living. Religionists who do not agree might point out that they differ only in incidents and not essentially, whereas the scientists differ on everything. Take the science of living. A week ago you would have said if you drank water with your meals. Now they say it doesn't do any harm at all. One variety says, "Eat meat, lots of it, to build good, rich blood." Another says meat is poison; that vegetables are the only food. A third declares meat and vegetables both increase debility and that you will live twice as long on raw fruits and nuts. Some say: "Talk with your meals, laugh. It makes the food digest." Others insist science is never so golden as at table.—Pittsburgh Press.
