

An Important Leak

By THOMAS R. DEAN

When a very young man I secured a position as clerk in a large diamond house. The diamonds were received in the rough and ground in a department for that purpose. They were sold both at wholesale and at retail, the wholesaling being done upstairs and the retailing on the ground floor.

One day just before closing the doors were all locked and every employee was ordered to a large room where the head of the firm spoke to us. He told us that there was a leakage of diamonds in the establishment and we must all be searched. This was done, but I didn't learn that diamonds were found on any one.

The leak continued—that was evident from the fact that a number of methods were adopted for catching the thief, though all of them were failures. A detective was introduced on the premises who went to work with us as an employee. We rarely had any change in the force, and a new man going to work among us, at a time when goods were missed, made me suspicious of this person—Ehrhart was his name—and I fell to watching him. I soon saw enough to convince me that he was what I took him for.

In order to facilitate matters, the firm offered a reward of $2,500 for evidence that would convict the perpetrator of the theft. It struck me that the reward would be more effective than Mr. Ehrhart. But I hadn't much confidence in either. Doubtless the thief had found some ingenious way of getting away with the plunder, and diamonds are so small that they could be removed without much chance of detection.

I was working on a small salary doing boy's work. Boys are the most observing creatures in the world, and I was no exception to the rule. I was not confined to any one department. I was doing odds and ends in all parts of the building. It struck me that I would like to earn that $2,500. I was ambitious to set up in some kind of a small business of my own, and the reward would be far more than enough capital for any I would think of going into.

Nevertheless I did not go about the matter deliberately or methodically. I didn't know how to make a beginning. I supposed the detective would know all about that, and I envied him his experience.

About the time the diamonds were missed mice began to appear on the premises. Traps were set in different places, and every day one or more mice were caught. But somehow the number of mice didn't seem to diminish. Then a cat was introduced. The cat, so far as could be seen, didn't catch any mice, but the traps did.

That gave me a suspicion that the mice might possibly have something to do with the missing diamonds. For my part I would rather trust a cat to catch mice than a trap. I have known mice to go all about a trap and let it severely alone. The next time I saw a mouse in a trap I noticed that it had been caught in such a way as to kill it. Indeed, I couldn't find that there was any mouse in the trap that would not kill it.

My suspicions having grown in this direction, I resolved to watch one of the traps. But this was easier said than done. The traps were placed in secluded corners. Any one could go to them at any time, but they were not in position to be watched. I gained nothing by this idea.

One day I found a mouse in a trap and concluded to throw it out. I did so and tossed it out through a window in the rear, where it fell in the small space between our building and the one behind it. I leaned on the window sill, looking down to see where it fell, and to my surprise I saw a flash that stood about a foot above the ground raised, a hand reach out and take the mouse in.

The problem was solved. The diamonds were removed in the mice. After taking time to consider what I should do I went to the head of the firm and told him that I could tell him of the way in which the diamonds were removed, though I did not know who stole them or who received them. I was told that if my information should lead to the detection of the thief I would be paid the reward. I then gave an account of my suspicions as to the mice being the means of conveyance for the diamonds, how I had thrown out the dead mouse and had seen it taken in through a basement window.

I was relieved of further responsibility in the matter, the management of the concern using its own methods. Mount Scott school house on the 27th day of December, 1912, at 8 o'clock p. m., to vote an additional tax for road purposes, as provided by an act of the legislature in 1909.

Man Coughs and Breaks Rib. After a frightful coughing spell a man in Neenah, Wis., felt terrible pains in his side and his doctor found two ribs had been broken. What says Dr. King's New Discovery would have saved him. A few teaspoonfuls ends a late cough, while persistent ones rids obstinate coughs, expels stubborn colds or heals weak, sore lungs. "I feel sure its a Godsend to humanity," writes Mrs. Effie Morion, Columbia, Mo., "for I believe I would have consumption today, if I had not used this great remedy." Its guaranty to satisfy, and you can get a free trial bottle 50-cent or $1.00 size at all dealers.

Origin of Croquet. The origin of croquet is certainly involved in mystery. Some authorities are of the opinion that it is founded on the old game of "pole maille," or pell-mell, from which we have the street Pull Mail. This is described by Cotgrave in his dictionary as "a game wherein a round box bowle is with a mallet struck through a high arch of yron," and a picture of this in Strutt's "Sports and Pastimes" shows that these had a strong resemblance to the croquet implements of today.

Odd Proposal of Marriage. That celebrated painter of flowers and figure subjects, William Hunt, was on one occasion commissioned by a gentleman to paint his portrait in the attitude of kneeling and holding in his hand an open scroll wherein were written a declaration of love and an offer of marriage. The lady to whom this unusual proposal of marriage was sent replied with a chalk drawing of herself with a sheet of paper in her hand, on which was inscribed a laconic "Yes."

A Bird That Shaves. The bunnat, a South American bird, takes a dry shave regularly. The bonnet has long blue tail feathers. Each quill is adorned from base to tip with soft blue down. This arrangement the bird dislikes. Therefore with its sharp beak it nips the quills bare from the base out to about an inch from the tip, where it maintains a neat oval of soft blue whisker. Such action seems silly on the bunnat's part to certain philosophers, though it seems no sillier than man's action in regularly scraping bare his cheeks and chin while he maintains on his upper lip an oval of soft hair not unlike the bonnet's tail oval.—Exchange.

The First Woman Suffragist. A modern historian makes the claim that Gregora Livof, the mighty Viking who afterwards became the first Duke of Normandy and the proscriber of William the Conqueror, was the first woman suffragist and that it was this valiant Norseman who summoned the first election call for woman's rights ten centuries ago.
