The question is one of education; and perhaps a local social hygiene society is as good a place to start as any other. Such a society, however, can but take the lead and show the way for the rest of the community: and unless the community follows in its steps, and seriously takes up the subject individually, the society will and founded upon personal spleen be little more than a well-meaning will excuse many things; but it will der that his bid was the lower. but powerless group of men. THIS ONE The Enterprise is taken IS ON US to task, as usual, by The Courier this week, this time for stat ing that Ed Olds did not bid upon the public elevator. For once in its uncertain life The Courier has hit it straight. The Enterprise did err- Ed Olds did bid on the elevator. He not only put in a bid, which was the lowest bld, but he furnished his own found them so inadequate and bizarre that after one glance they gave them no further consideration. For the modest sum of $11,959 Ed Olds offer ed the city a cross between an oll-wall derrick and a power-line tower-an affair so absolutely unsuited to the requirements that no city official thought it worth while to waste a moment's thought upon it after the first review. And so no further reference was made to the Olds bid, possibly out of kindness to Mr. Olds as much as for any other reason. For $21 more the Oregon Bridge & Construction company offered to build a handsome tower, one suitable to 'be requirements of a public elevator, and one that is in every way safe-guarded against stresses of weather and wind. For $21 more this firm was willing to erect a structure that will endure for all time, and about which there will never arise any question as to strength or suitability. Not knowing the general opinion of the elevator committee as to the Olds plans, and never having heard them mentioned, The Enterprise concluded that there hadn't been any plans offered. However, this paper is now glad to ack nowledge its mistake, and to say that for $21 less than the bid of the successful bidder, Ed Olds offered to build for Oregon City a structure that was so generally unsuited to the purpose for which it was designed that the council wasted no time in considering his bid. The council wanted at least, to get its money's worth.

INDEPENDENCE

National independence was declared one hundred thirty seven years ago. But personal independence in most cases has to be secured by each man for himself. One of the most important requirements for any man's independence is a comfortable sum of money laid by. The business of the bank is to provide a place where any man can keep his money in safety, both while it is being saved and after a goodly sum has been accumulated. A bank account, therefore, has come to be the surest path to fortune and independence. We urge everyone who has no deposit in the bank to begin keeping an account at once.
