The referendum was slapped on to these measures by Portland persons who believed that the institution should be combined with the agricul-tural college at Corvallis, and whose ambitions lie in the direction of such a consolidation. They even propose to latter bring measures before the legislature asking for the consolidation and they contend that such ap-propriations in the meantime would be extravagant and wasteful. The people of the state, however, voted for the support of the university and for such improvements as it needs as long as it is located where it now is and decided to determine the other is of his home, Lynn Hatch, son of E.
