COURTESIES OF WAR. Christmas Boxes the Boers Dropped Among the English. When the Boers advanced on Ladysmith in the Transvaal was the late Melton Prior was one of the twenty newspaper correspondents who threw in their lot with the English army instead of making the hurried retreat that was still possible. In his book, "Campaigns of a War Correspondent," he tells many interesting incidents of the siege. The enemy succeeded in placing thirty-two guns on the heights above the town and kept up such an incessant fire that the troops and civilians were soon engaged in digging bomb proof shelters. In a short time they learned to distinguish the different boer guns by their sound and gave them amusing names. Three of the large ones they called "Long Tom," "Puffing Billy" and "Woody Willie." Then there was "Silent Susan," so named because the bursting of a shell was the first warning we got that it had been fired. "Bloody Mary," as you may suppose, was looked upon as a beast of a gun. In spite of the auditors soon grew accustomed to the shelling. One day the Second Gordon highlanders were playing football, when a shell plumped in among them. Fortunately, no one was hit and they went on playing. The Boers were so interested, apparently, that they gave up firing and actually sat on the edge of the hills, watching the game. Then, when it was all over, the firing started afresh. But this was not the only courtesy the enemy showed. On Christmas day they saluted the happy moon by salvoes of shells. The first two that fell into the camps of the cambriseurs and the Imperial Light horse did not burst. When the shells were picked up it was found that wooden plugs had been inserted in place of the fuses, and inside the shells were plum puddings. On the outside were the words, "With the compliments of the season." Lucky is the man who doesn't depend upon his luck.

The world's greatest salmon runs are to be found along the shores of the north Pacific ocean, in the states of Washington, Oregon and California, the province of British Columbia and Alaska, on the American side, and Siberia and Japan, on the Asiatic side. So far, however, but few salmon have been canned on the Asiatic side. To one who has never witnessed these annual runs it is almost an impossibility to convey an adequate impression of the countless numbers of fish that swim in from the sea in the late spring and summer, all imbued with the same desire—to gain suitable grounds in the upper reaches of the rivers, some of which are from 1,500 to 2,500 miles in length, where they may perpetuate the species. No obstacle appears too great to be surmounted in this feverish rush. Jumping falls, shooting rapids, dodging nets, bears, birds, snail, otter and other enemies, fighting with other males, whom the near approach of the breeding season renders especially savage—all these are taken as a matter of course. And yet one sometimes wonders if the heroic struggle is worthily repaid, for the moment of victory is also that of death, as, sad to relate, these valiant voyagers can breed but once and then must die, their wasted bodies, which have received no nourishment since leaving salt water, becoming the prey of any prowling bear or caribou bird which may chance upon them. Why these fish should all die after spawning still remains one of the great unsolved mysteries of the scientific world.—Wide World Magazine. Pocket Hunters. There is no more interesting character in California than that class of prospector known as the "pocket hunter." In certain sections of the mountains the rich gold deposits are contained in small scattered pockets near the surface. The pocket miners often discover many rich deposits by tracing the particles of gold in the soil to their sources. As soon as a pocket is gouged out and colors of gold are no longer shown the place is abandoned. In one pocket in Trinity county as much as $45,000 was yielded in a few feet.—Argonaut. How He Uses His Hands. Some curious facts about Mr. Townsend, the art editor of London Punch, are narrated. He is a curious instance of ambidexterity. His drawings are done with the left hand, but his letters are written with the right hand. He is left handed as a billiard player, but right handed as a card dealer. And when he plays cricket he is a left handed bowler but a right handed batsman.—London Answers. Way to Marital Happiness. "Marry a bright woman for success and a pretty one for happiness," advises a student of the problem. Also one who can cook for the benefit of the digestion might be advisable, but the pesky laws limit you to one.—Louisville Courier-Journal. The Contemplative Worm. From a series of experiments conducted by Professor Yerkes of Harvard college the professor has become convinced that an anglerworm can think. Knowing that an anglerworm will always crawl out of a lighted place into a dark one, the professor put the worm which he was experimenting on into a glass dish in which were two dark holes. The right hand hole was merely a regular earth cavity. The left hand one, however, contained a mildly charged electric battery, the object of which is to give the worm a shock in case it should enter. The worm soon learned its lesson and always went to the right when it was put into the glass dish.
