Night Fighting Idea Vindicated.

"The taking of Torreon has confirmed Villa in his belief in night fighting, his principal contribution to date to the science of Mexican warfare. It is true that at night there may be confusion and the troops may fire on their own side, as is said to have occurred once during the slege. On the other hand, he holds, night attacks give the assallants protection they would not otherwise have, keep the garrison in constant suspense and have a greater moral effect on the enemy.

"The three salient features of the campaign against Torreon, features which will no doubt be carried into the campaign against other cities to the efficiency of the sanitary arrangements, said to be unequaled in the history of Mexican warfare: the remarkable quickness with which the wrecked railways in front of the advancing army were made passable and the continuance of night attacks, giving the combatants a weird and sinister aspect which the struggie by day will always lack."

The swampy character of much of the surface of Alaska makes it a great breeding ground for mosquitoes and gnats, which are almost intolerable pests to both man and beast. It also makes drainage a prerequisite in order to remove the surplus water so that the land can be worked, raise the temperature of the surface soil, lower the frost line, facilitate the decay of the accumulated organic matter and bring about chemical changes which will transform the soil from a very acid condition to one much less so Nature requires much time for this last process. Where the vegetable accumulations are largely moss this must be destroyed either by burning or by carting it from the land, for if plowed under it decays very slowly and seems to have an injurious effect on most crop plants. The timber growth, which occurs on practically all the land suitable for tillage, must, of course, be cleared from the land.

All this work-building houses and barns, draining, clearing land of moss and timber-is very slowly accomplished in the short outdoor working season if done single handed by the homesteader and costly, almost prohibitively so if hired labor is used, because of the high wages and living ex-

The federal homestead laws extend to Alaska, excepting that, instead of 160 acres, 320 may be filed upon. Very little of the available land has been surveyed, but that work is now in progress. One may locate on unsurveyed land, file a claim and establish lines by metes and bounds, but he cannot secure a title until a survey has been made by an authorized surveyor and the survey approved. If the survey is made in advance of that made by the government it is done at the expense of the homesteaders, and that is heavy.
