PACKEY PEER OF ALL

McFarland is only equal of Old-time fighters

When Frank Erne was champion lightweight he was known as the most brainy governor of his time, and Erne flourished when great lightweights were plentiful. Therefore, when he speaks of boxing, what he says has weight and is decidedly interesting as well. Erne was discussing the Gibbons-Howard bout and incidentally commented on the boxing situation in general.

have held his own with Tommy Ryan and Kid McCoy. They were more seasoned. They had too much experience. "I'll tell you why the old timers were better than the present set. In our time we fought twenty and twenty-five rounds, and you have to be a general to box over ten. We used to think nothing of the first ten. It was along about the fifteenth that the strain began to tell. Then newwork counted and the man with brains came to the front."

"You don't have to think to box ten rounds. We would have thought that a joke. But twenty-five is a different thing. The last five rounds were torture. The mental strain was terrific as well as the muscular effort. When you are tired and exhausted it is much harder, as well as more necessary, to think and plan. That's why the long fights made good generals of us."

"Packy McFarland is the peer of all boxers in the ring today, principally because he understands feinting. His feinting is remarkable. Feinting is the real art of boxing. Why, in our day we never took an opening that was given us. We thought it a trap. We only took advantage of the openings that we made for ourselves by our feinting. There were real hitters in those days, and one mistake was usually fatal."

"Yes, boxing was decidedly different in those days. For one thing, there was more at stake. As a rule the purse was out two-thirds to the winner and one-third to the loser, and that made the strain much greater."

"Another difference was the way we trained. Some of the lightweights of my time were almost as big as the middleweights of today, yet they made the weight by a long course of special preparation. For instance, weeks before a bout we would go out into the country where we had plenty of fresh air. Every morning we would do ten or twelve miles on the road, and that brought down the weight. We were also put on a strict diet. A full cup of tea with our meals was something not to be thought of. We were only allowed enough water for a gargle after exercising. There is none of that routine now. It is not necessary in order to tan through ten rounds with not even a decision at stake."

No Trick to Pull. "Say, the next time you're out late I wish you wouldn't blame it on me." "What's the matter with you?" "Matter enough. Your wife called up my house at 1 o'clock the other morning to find out if I knew where you were."

VIRTUE. Cultivate virtue because it is the perfect good which is the complement of a happy life. It is the knowledge both of others and of itself; it is an invincible greatness of mind not to be envied or detected with good or ill fortune.—Seneca.

Heart to Heart Talks

By CHARLES N. LURIE

THE PUBLIC DEFENDER. There's a new idea in city and county administration—that of hiring a law officer to serve as public defender of persons accused of crime who are too poor to engage counsel with their own means.

This may do away in time with what is a fearful evil of American life—the "railroading" to prison of men innocent of crime who have been unfortunate enough to fall under suspicion and are accused on circumstantial evidence.

In too many cases there is no one to intercede for such men—often they are unlettered and ignorant and unable to defend themselves with voice or pen—and public prosecutors and police officials, desirous of making "good" records, expedite their cases.

The result is the denial of justice and the infliction of injustice. The new system of having a public defender to offset the public prosecutor has been found to work well in Los Angeles county, Cal. Justice Craig of the superior court of the county testifies that the system has worked to obtain for defendants a more able defense than they would otherwise have and has protected the public from the use of methods which are sometimes questionable on the part of private defenders.

There's little doubt that the system is a good one. But— Do we not need public defenders for others than those suspected of crime? In the imperfect state of our laws, despite their enormous numbers, there are many offenses which they do not touch. Overworking women and children, for instance, is not contrary to the statutes in many places, although the tendency is all toward giving them proper protection. If we have a public defender of such feeble folk, who cannot protect themselves, would it not be his first duty to see that justice is dealt to them?

And how about the poor babies who are permitted to die because their parents are ignorant of the first laws of hygiene and cleanliness? Do they not need a public defender? How about the boys and girls who have no proper playgrounds and have to do their running and jumping and playing amid the perils of the city streets? A public defender could find much work among such.

Too much paternalism in the idea? Perhaps, but the world is no longer content to let the natural laws of selection and "the survival of the fittest" work their will on the bodies and souls and minds of men. The "brotherhood of man" is becoming more than an empty ideal. Each of us is his brother's keeper in ever increasing measure.

A Medal of Blood. Garibaldi was once presented with a medal made of his own blood. The giver was a Maiani of Naples, who was well known as a petriker and preserver of the human body. Dr. Maiani in offering the gift to Garibaldi said that whenever the general looked at it it would brace him up for the last fight, and across the medal were engraved the words, "The Blood of Garibaldi is Forever Red." The strange medal is preserved by the general's descendants.

No wonder Solomon was the champion wise man, with 1000 wives to coach him.
